The Yeomen of the King's Guard 1485-1547

by

Anita Rosamund Hewerdine

of the London School of Economics and Political Science

University of London

A thesis submitted for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy in the University of London

August 1998
Abstract

The Tudor bodyguard known as the Yeomen of the Guard has been viewed generally as a ceremonial body used to add splendour to the royal court. This thesis shows that, while the Guard's ceremonial role was of special importance, the corps was of greater significance than this function would suggest. The corps was a true bodyguard, in constant attendance upon the sovereign throughout the two reigns described. One of Henry VII's first acts as king was to institute a personal bodyguard which also provided him with an impressive retinue, arrayed in richly embellished jackets of his livery and forming part of the royal affinity. Like other members of the affinity, the yeomen were appointed to crown offices in the provinces, safeguarding the king's interests, collecting his revenues and upholding the law. They reported on local situations and brought news of events at court to the provinces, thus supplying a means of communication between central and local government.

The origins, foundation and constitution of the Guard are traced, as far as the absence of any foundation documents will allow. Methods of recruitment are described, together with the remuneration, rewards and other benefits received by the yeomen. The Guard's complement did not remain static and by using evidence contained in royal accounts its size has been indicated more accurately than previously known. The duties and functions of the Guard were more varied than has been supposed, both within and outside the court, and included military and naval service, at home and abroad. Some of the yeomen also formed part of a peace-keeping force in the garrison at Tournai in 1513-19.

The thesis ends with a description of individuals in the Guard, showing their family and social background, private occupations and offices held, as well as their geographical spread throughout the country.
Table of Contents

List of Abbreviations ................................................................. vii

Introduction ............................................................................... 1

1. Foundation of the Guard .......................................................... 10
   Origins: Early Opinions ......................................................... 10
   The Guard's foundation and constitution ................................. 14
   Sources of recruitment to the Guard ....................................... 17
   Yeomen of the Guard, Crown and Chamber ............................ 19
   Conclusion ............................................................................ 24

2. Remuneration and Development of the Guard ......................... 25
   Remuneration ........................................................................ 25
      (a) Wages ........................................................................ 25
      (b) Fee of the crown ....................................................... 28
      (c) Other fees .................................................................. 28
      (d) Annuities and corrodies ............................................ 29
   Other rewards and privileges ................................................. 30
   The Guard's complement ...................................................... 34
   Reforms of 1490's to 1515 .................................................... 37
   Reforms of 1519 .................................................................. 38
   Reforms of 1526 .................................................................. 39
   Reforms of 1539/40 ............................................................. 44
   Later changes ....................................................................... 45
   Officers of the Guard ........................................................... 46
   Conclusion ............................................................................ 49

3. Functions and Livery of the Guard ............................................ 50
   Conditions of service ........................................................... 50
   Duties at court ....................................................................... 51
   Duties outside the court ...................................................... 54
   Duties at royal events .......................................................... 56
   Special offices ....................................................................... 58
   Livery .................................................................................. 59
   Ceremonial events ............................................................... 69
   Conclusion ............................................................................ 74

4. The Guard's Involvement in Naval and Military Activity ............ 75
   Background to methods of enlistment to the royal army ........... 75
   The Guard's military obligations .......................................... 77
   Special responsibilities ........................................................ 78
   General naval activities and offices held ............................... 81
   Preparing for campaigns ..................................................... 83
   Military training ................................................................... 84
   Payments to the Guard on active service .............................. 86
   Naval activity under Henry VII ............................................ 86
   Early Tudor combats .......................................................... 87
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Section</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Military activity under Henry VII</td>
<td>88</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rewards and forfeitures</td>
<td>89</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Naval activity under Henry VIII</td>
<td>90</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Military activity under Henry VIII</td>
<td>92</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Garrison duties</td>
<td>96</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(a) Calais</td>
<td>96</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(b) Tournai</td>
<td>96</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Possible disaffection in the Guard</td>
<td>99</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Conclusion</td>
<td>100</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

5. The Role of the Guard in the Localities                              | 101  |
| Bastard feudal society and the royal affinity                          | 101  |
| The hierarchy of local government                                      | 102  |
| Appointment of yeomen to county offices: fees and other benefits       | 104  |
| Offices granted in survivorship and reversion                         | 109  |
| Contemporary conduct in securing offices                              | 110  |
| Service on commissions                                                | 112  |
| Activities of office holders                                          | 113  |
| Problems encountered by office holders and commissioners              | 115  |
| Complaints levelled against individual yeomen                         | 118  |
| The use of yeomen in county administration                            | 119  |
| Conclusion                                                             | 121  |

6. Family and Social Status of Members of the Guard                    | 122  |
| Recruitment by special recommendation                                 | 122  |
| Status of royal servants                                              | 123  |
| Diversity of information on yeomen’s backgrounds and careers          | 124  |
| The yeomen as business men and property owners                        | 125  |
| Financial standing of the yeomen                                     | 128  |
| The family backgrounds of the yeomen                                  | 131  |
| Public service and the importance of status                           | 132  |
| Personal petitions and lawsuits                                       | 133  |
| The Guard as seen by others                                           | 138  |
| Geographical distribution of the yeomen                               | 140  |
| Memorials to individual yeomen                                        | 142  |
| Conclusion                                                             | 143  |

7. Conclusions                                                          | 144  |

Appendices
A. Livery of black cloth for Henry VII’s funeral                         | 149  |
B. Henry VII’s Yeomen of the Guard, Crown and Chamber                     | 152  |
C. Oath of allegiance                                                     | 158  |
D. Yeomen appointed to County Offices                                    | 159  |
E. Yeomen of the Guard by County                                         | 172  |
F. Biographical Notes                                                    | 182  |

Bibliography                                                             | 276  |
List of Tables

1. Yeomen of the Guard named in grants during first year of Henry VII’s Reign .... 15
2. Wardrobe accounts showing the number of yeomen ushers and yeomen of the Chamber entitled to receive livery of cloth for watching clothing ..................... 20
3. Yeomen of the crown in receipt of the crown fee in Henry VII’s Reign .......... 21
4. Henry VII’s yeomen of the crown in receipt of the crown fee who are listed as yeomen of the Chamber ................................................................. 22
5. Numbers of yeomen ushers and yeomen of the Chamber, 1496-1546 ............ 41
6. Yeomen of the Guard at Tournai who signed the letter of protest to Wolsey and the Council ................................................................. 99
7. Showing differing rates for certain yeomen on two assessment lists for the subsidy in the royal household ................................................................. 130

List of Illustrations

1. Henry VII ........................................................................................................... ix
2. Soldier of the French king’s Scots bodyguard during Francis I’s reign .......... 13
3. Earliest known representation of yeomen of the Guard .............................. 60
4. Map of England and Wales, showing counties of origin or residence of stated number of yeomen of the Guard ...................................................... 141
Preface

The preparation of this thesis has been a long and arduous task, since it was necessarily undertaken on a part-time basis, and it is entirely my own work. It would not have been started without the initial assistance of Miss Margaret Dixon, who allowed me space in her home in London for several years, enabling me to get the research under way. The choice of topic originated from an incident many years previously, when my father handed to me a copy of Sir Reginald Hennell's book which had belonged to his father, G. J. F. Hewerdine. This thesis may be seen as a form of tribute to the grandfather I never knew, a member of the illustrious royal bodyguard whose origins I set out to discover.

Many people have shown an interest in my research, and I gratefully acknowledge in the text the references to documents and publications which they provided. Thanks are due to Dr. David Starkey, who supervised my work throughout, and to Professor John Gillingham, who gave practical advice in the later stages. It is a pleasure to record my thanks, for comments on papers read in early form, to members of the Tudor and Stuart seminar at the Institute of Historical Research, and to members of the Late Medieval and Early Modern Students' Group Seminar at the London School of Economics. I am particularly grateful to Dr. Shelagh Mitchell, a member of both these seminar groups, for her friendly help and support over the past seven years. My special thanks go to Dr. Andrew Thrush for his interest, advice and practical help. The encouragement of Mrs. Jean Tsushima and Miss Frances Devereux has also sustained me over the years. I gladly acknowledge the assistance given by the staff at the various institutions I have visited, especially the librarians at the Institute of Historical Research. I am particularly indebted to Dr. Ian van Breda for producing the final copy of my thesis on his Macintosh computer, and am grateful to Mr. R. H. Tucker for processing my Amstrad discs to make the transition possible. Finally, I thank my twin sister, Celia Hewerdine, for her support in various ways during the long years of my endeavours.
List of Abbreviations

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Abbreviation</th>
<th>Description</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Ant. Rep.</td>
<td>The Antiquarian Repertory</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bacon</td>
<td>J. Spedding, R. L. Ellis and D. D. Heath, eds., The Literary and Professional Works of Francis Bacon</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>BIHR</td>
<td>Bulletin of the Institute of Historical Research</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>BL</td>
<td>British Library</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CA</td>
<td>College of Arms</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CCR</td>
<td>Calendar of the Close Rolls</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CIPM</td>
<td>Calendar of Inquisitions Post Mortem</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CPR</td>
<td>Calendar of the Patent Rolls</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CPR Yorkist</td>
<td>Calendar of the Patent Rolls, Edward IV, Edward V and Richard III 1476-1485</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>DKB</td>
<td>Reports of the Deputy Keeper of the Public Records</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>DNB</td>
<td>Dictionary of National Biography</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ed.</td>
<td>Editor</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>EETS</td>
<td>Early English Text Society</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>EHR</td>
<td>English Historical Review</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>HMC</td>
<td>Royal Commission on Historical Manuscripts</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>HO</td>
<td>A Collection of Ordinances and Regulations for the Government of the Royal Household Made in Divers Reigns from King Edward III to King William and Queen Mary</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LP</td>
<td>Letters and Papers, Foreign and Domestic, of the Reign of Henry VIII, 1509-1547</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ms.</td>
<td>Manuscript</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>NS</td>
<td>New series</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>PCC</td>
<td>Prerogative Court of Canterbury</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>PPE Henry VIII</td>
<td>Privy Purse Expences of Henry VIII</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>PRO</td>
<td>Public Record Office</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rot. Parl.</td>
<td>Rotuli Parliamentorum</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>RS</td>
<td>The Royal Society</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>transl.</td>
<td>Translator</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>VCH</td>
<td>Victoria History of the Counties of England</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>WAM</td>
<td>Westminster Abbey Muniments</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>WCA</td>
<td>Westminster City Archives</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Manuscripts cited without location are in the Public Record Office, and those prefixed BL are in the British Library. In transcriptions from manuscripts the spelling has been modernized, abbreviations have been expanded, and modern punctuation and capitalization adopted throughout. Names of individuals and places have also been modernized as far as possible. The figures following citations of LP refer, unless otherwise stated, to numbers of documents. Where the original document cited in LP has been used, the reference to the manuscript is given first, followed by the LP reference. Unless otherwise stated, the place of publication of printed sources was London. Full references to printed works will be found in the Bibliography.

Archives visited in connection with the research: -

  Public Record Office
  British Library
  College of Arms
  Guildhall Library
  East Sussex Record Office
  Sussex Archaeological Society
  Westminster City Archives
  Westminster Abbey Muniments
  The Royal Society
  Yeomen of the Guard’s headquarters, St. James’s Palace
Illustration 1. Henry VII
From a portrait at the Society of Antiquaries, London.
Introduction

From ancient times kings and other rulers used bodyguards to protect them from their enemies, particularly in wartime. In England, succeeding monarchs took what measures they considered necessary for their own security, and the duty of guarding the king was often attached to more than one group of royal servants. Although all members of the royal household had an obligation to ensure the safety of the sovereign, and to serve in the royal army when required, by the thirteenth century three groups of royal servants shared the specific duty of guarding the monarch:- the sergeants at arms, the king's foot archers and the esquires of the household.1 Royal protection was raised to an unprecedented level towards the end of the fourteenth century, when Richard II added substantially to the forces guarding him, recruiting an extra bodyguard of over 300 archers from Cheshire, with a further reserve of another 300 archers.2 But these did not endure beyond the reign.

By the late fifteenth century the esquires of the household had diminished,3 so that the duty of guarding the king was shared by the sergeants at arms and the king's foot archers, both groups being based permanently at court. A household ordinance of 1318 had stated that the number of sergeants at arms should not exceed 30, of whom four were to sleep outside the king's chamber at night while the rest were to sleep in the hall, and when the king travelled all of them were to ride before him.4 In Edward III's time the number varied between 16 and 22.5 According to Edward IV's household ordinances of about 1471, known as the Black Book, the complement of sergeants at arms was set at four, of whom two were always to attend upon the king's person and his Chamber.6 The 1318 ordinance shows a complement of 24 foot archers, but in practice this varied in number from 16 to 44,7 and in the Black Book the successors to the king's foot archers are shown as the 24 yeomen of the crown, who were to be girded with their swords or other weapons when they were on watch at night.8 The numbers specified for both the sergeants at arms and the yeomen of the crown were known also to have been exceeded in

2. Ibid., pp. 54 and 223.
5. Ibid., p.22.
7. Given-Wilson, p.22.
8. Myers, p.117.
Edward IV's time and later. Richard III's known household included 138 yeomen of the crown, who apparently 'had not entirely lost their protective function'.1 Possibly these formed the guard with Richard III at Bosworth, mentioned by Polydore Vergil.2 At the time of Henry Tudor's victory on 22 August 1485, therefore, the sergeants at arms and the yeomen of the crown represented the survivors of the ancient royal bodyguards.

Although several writers have published a general history of the royal bodyguard of the yeomen of the Guard, the corps has not previously attracted the serious attention of historians. This may be partly due to the assumption that the Guard was merely a ceremonial body, used to enhance the splendour of the Tudor court. While this was indeed a very important role of the Guard, it was by no means the only one.

The bodyguard is mentioned briefly in Polydore Vergil's Anglica Historia,3 written early in the sixteenth century, and in Robert Fabian's The New Chronicles of England and France.4 Edward Hall's Chronicle, published in 1547,5 includes several references to the Guard and to individual members. Later authors to mention the Guard included Francis Bacon, in his History of the Reign of King Henry the Seventh, completed in 1622.6 But the first writer to attempt a description of the Guard's history was Samuel Pegge, a royal servant whose narration was included in his Curialia,7 first published in 1782. Although Pegge, like those after him, could find few particulars for Henry VII's time, he mentioned the likelihood that the bodyguard was modelled on that of the French king, which both Vergil and Hall had previously suggested. Pegge also referred to the use of the Guard as a military force in Henry VIII's French campaigns of 1513 and 1544, citing Rymer's Foedera as his source. The first author to produce a book entirely devoted to the subject of the Guard's history was Thomas Smith, whose work was published in 1852.8 In the preface the author stated that the work was abridged from Pegge's Curialia and other sources, including the records of the Guard. A more substantial history, published in 1904 in a limited edition, was written by Sir Reginald Hennell,9 who held office as lieutenant of the Guard at the time. This incorporated material from Thomas Preston's The Yeomen of the Guard: their history from 1485 to 1885. And a concise account of the Tower Warders, published in 1885 and 1887. The inclusion of the Tower Warders in the books by Smith and Preston indicates a close relationship between these two bodies. As this thesis will show, the yeomen on duty at the Tower of London formed a distinct and separate unit from the royal bodyguard, being based permanently in the Tower. The personnel, however, consisted of former yeomen of the Guard or other royal servants who had served in the Chamber of the king or queen.

7. S. Pegge, Curialia, or an Historical Account of Some Branches of the Royal Household (1782; 1791 edition).

Hennell made use of far more manuscript sources than the previous authors, but he too referred to the difficulty experienced in his attempts to find information on the foundation and early history of the Guard. No records of the earliest years of the Guard's existence were to be found at its headquarters in St. James's Palace, and Hennell assumed that they had been destroyed in a fire which damaged the palace in January 1809. Pegge, Smith and Hennell used as their main source for the earliest years Francis Bacon's History of the Reign of King Henry the Seventh, and cited the works of Polydore Vergil and Edward Hall. In more recent years, Sir Julian Paget's The Yeomen of the Guard, giving a general and updated account of the Guard to commemorate its quincentenary, was published in 1984.

Apart from these general accounts of the royal bodyguard, one substantial article by C. R. Beard appeared in The Archaeological Journal in 1925, on the clothing and arming of the Guard.1 Beard severely criticised some of the information given by Hennell, who did indeed make inaccurate statements and misinformed judgments, despite his stated intention to include in his book only the evidence which could be authenticated. This is particularly noticeable in Hennell's speculative descriptions of the livery worn by the Guard in the reign of its founder, Henry VII. He assumed, incorrectly, that from the start the yeomen had been clad in a shade of red and that the monogram of the reigning monarch had been displayed on their jackets. The list of captains of the Guard which Hennell includes is also flawed. For example, although he correctly shows the first four captains in the text, he follows Thomas Preston in including John de Vere, earl of Oxford, Sir Richard Guildford and Sir John Gage on the list of captains. There is no evidence at all that any of these ever served in the office, although Gage became vice-chamberlain.

Nevertheless, Hennell was a professional soldier, not a trained historian. Some distinguished modern historians, moreover, have also made inaccurate and sweeping statements about the Guard. Both G. R. Elton and J. D. Mackie seem to have been unaware that the Guard was an active bodyguard which protected the king wherever he went, including the battle-field. In his England under the Tudors, Elton remarked that the Guard ‘was never more than a ceremonial body useful in adding dignity to the royal person and in policing the court’,1 while Mackie in The Earlier Tudors 1485-1558, referring to Henry VII’s Guard, declared that ‘There is no record of their having taken part in the warfare of the reign’.2 Both writers also made misleading statements on the colour of the Guard’s apparel in Henry VII’s time. Elton referred to the ‘red-coated’ Guard,3 while Mackie repeated a suggestion that the ‘scarlet of their uniforms symbolized the dragon of Cadwaladr’.4 It may be partially due to these comments that the Tudor bodyguard has been overlooked as an institution worthy of serious study.

The reason for the somewhat dismissive statements on the yeomen of the Guard may stem partly from Bacon’s assertion that Henry VII himself emphasized the Guard’s ceremonial role,5 and partly from certain references made by foreign diplomats visiting the English court during Henry VIII’s reign. Their dispatches, published in 1854 in Rawdon Brown’s Four Years at the Court of King Henry VIII, referred to the impressive appearance of the king’s Guard lining the approaches to the presence of the monarch.6 In the absence of any other readily accessible material about the royal bodyguard, this particular role as a ceremonial corps was widely regarded as its sole function. More precise information on the Guard was obtainable if specifically sought, however, from the printed sources already noted, and from the Letters and Papers, Foreign and Domestic, of the Reign of Henry VIII, 1509-1547.7 In addition, the presence of the Guard accompanying Henry VIII as he set off for war with France is noted by Hall for the 1513 campaign8 and by Rymer for the action of 1544.9 A suggestion of a military role is contained in a Venetian diplomatic report of 1498, printed by the Camden Society in 1847, in which the members of Henry VII’s bodyguard were described as ‘soldier courtiers’.10

3. Elton, p.43.
5. Bacon, p.35.
8. Hall, p.539.
10. C. A. Sneyd, ed. and transl., A Relation, or rather a true Account of the Island of England ... about the year 1500, Camden Society, 37 (1847) [hereafter Sneyd], p.47.
Nevertheless, one modern historian, C. G. Cruickshank, was well aware of the Guard's military role, including some information in his books on Henry VIII's campaign of 1513.¹

The chief reason why no previous historian has attempted to write a history of the yeomen of the Guard is probably due to the lack of a single archive. No original material now exists for the early Tudor period at the Guard's headquarters in St. James's Palace, or at the Tower of London. The manuscript sources which have survived are fragmentary and scattered among various classes of documents in different locations, principally at the Public Record Office and the British Library. Therefore the printed accounts of the royal bodyguard which have been cited above have formed the accepted view of this institution.

It is known that certain records were kept at the time, probably by the administrative officer in the Guard called the clerk of the cheque, and there are references in the accounts of the treasurer of the Chamber to 'the book of the Guard'.² The material collected would have consisted of orders, attendance records, payments of wages and fees, livery warrants and possibly details of other offices held. It is likely that as books were filled they were regarded as obsolete, and although they may have been retained for a while they were eventually discarded.

Initially, in order to determine what type of record had survived, the principal calendars of primary sources for the period concerned were consulted. These were the Rev. William Campbell's Materials for a History of the Reign of Henry VII, the Calendar of Patent Rolls, Henry VII, 1485-1509;³ the Calendar of Fine Rolls, Henry VII, 1485-1509;⁴ and, as mentioned earlier, the Letters and Papers, Foreign and Domestic, of the Reign of Henry VIII, 1509-1547. Details of many different types of grants made to the yeomen were obtained from these sources, augmented in the earliest cases by the information given in Henry VII's Act of Resumption, printed in Rotuli Parliamentorum.⁵ The calendars also included information on the contents of warrants to the keeper of the Great Wardrobe, excerpts from the accounts of the treasurer of the Chamber, and ordinances of the royal household. Several examples of the latter were examined in greater detail in *A Collection of Ordinances and Regulations for the Government of the Royal Household*¹ Narratives of events at court appearing in The Antiquarian Repertory,² John Leland’s *Collectanea*³ and Rawdon Brown’s Four Years at the Court of King Henry VIII,⁴ along with Anstis’s The Register of the most noble Order of the Garter,⁵ provided another important source of printed material relevant to the Guard.

². E36/215, f.252v; E36/216, fos.44r and 65r.

An attempt has been made to discover as much as possible about the Guard’s origins, early history and activities, bearing in mind the limitations of the surviving original records. The information sought specifically related to the Guard’s foundation and constitution, pay, rewards and other benefits, duties and functions, as well as to its apparel and accoutrements. Apart from these basic facts, the object of the research was also to determine the Guard’s place at court, its activities beyond the confines of the court, particularly its involvement in armed service to the crown, and its role in local government. Finally, it was resolved to make a detailed examination of the individuals who served in the royal bodyguard, including evidence of their experiences and progress in royal service as well as their private concerns, family and social background and, where possible, their county of origin or residence.

In order to build up a picture of the Guard from 1485 to 1547, many classes of original documents were examined, some of which produced no relevant material. This applied particularly to the Declared Accounts of the Pipe Office and Audit which, while containing much military and naval material, produced nothing of direct significance to the Guard itself. The research included challenging the accepted belief that the Guard was actually founded by Henry VII, and a search was made through manuscript records of the Exchequer and Great Wardrobe in the reigns of Edward IV and Richard III, as well as the former’s household ordinances, producing a negative result. As will be shown, the sole reference discovered on the Guard’s foundation in an original source appears in a draft document of c.1536/7, proposing the formation of a company of gentlemen at arms. A check was also made on the information printed by Campbell and in the calendar of Henry VII’s patent rolls, to establish that the description of individuals as yeomen of the Guard was correctly shown. The original manuscripts of the earliest of Henry VII’s patent rolls were studied, together with the Chancery

---

1. A Collection of Ordinances and Regulations for the Government of the Royal Household Made in Divers Reigns from King Edward III to King William and Queen Mary (Society of Antiquaries, 1790) [hereafter HO].
4. Rawdon Brown, pp.78 and 85.
warrants for the Great Seal which authorized the letters patent. In both instances the printed sources were found to be correct. The source of Bacon's statement that Henry VII intended the bodyguard to be a permanent one has not been traced, though the fact has proved to be true.

It became clear early in the research that in Henry VII's time yeomen of the crown, and to a lesser extent yeomen of the Chamber, were mentioned in manuscript sources far more frequently than yeomen of the Guard. The unravelling of these three categories of royal servants posed one of the greatest problems, which in the case of the yeomen of the crown was further confused by payment of a special fee, granted by patent, to a certain number only. While this matter may not be entirely resolved, the question has been closely studied, from a variety of manuscript sources, and a theory propounded.

In seeking evidence indicating the Guard's complement, all of the extant accounts kept by the treasurer of the Chamber were searched for details of wage payments. These accounts survive only from 1495, with a gap throughout most of the 1520s, but the warrants for issues from the Exchequer of Receipt produced documents from 1493, showing the total annual amount set aside for the Guard's wages. Certain warrants sent by the king to the keeper of the Great Wardrobe supplied another means of establishing the strength of the Guard. For the later years of Henry VIII's reign a further source for estimating the Guard's complement was provided by the assessments for subsidy payments due from personnel of the royal household, where a few complete lists of yeomen of the Guard have survived. In addition, the reforms which took place in the bodyguard were traced, largely from evidence provided in the treasurer of the Chamber's accounts. From all of these sources combined, it became evident that the Guard's complement did not remain static.

Intensive research was conducted on the Guard's duties, on its apparel and its accoutrements. In order to verify a printed description of the Guard's duties, a detailed study was made of eight manuscript copies of the household ordinances, held at the Public Record Office, British Library, College of Arms, and the Royal Society. Five of these manuscripts contained an identical section on the duties of the Guard. Their particular functions when sent out of court on the king's business were also indicated by the payments shown to individual yeomen in the accounts of the treasurer of the Chamber. In attempting to discover how the yeomen were clad and equipped, a multitude of records relating to the Great Wardrobe were examined, producing valuable evidence of the apparel worn by the Guard on different occasions, and showing the weapons which they bore.

1. Classes C66 and C82 respectively.
2. Bacon, p.35.
The Eltham ordinances of 1526 represented a major revision of the rules and regulations for the royal household, and included a section devoted to the Guard, which provided details of the reforms to be made, rather than specifying duties. All the known manuscripts in the Public Record Office and British Library were studied, together with a microfilm copy of the only surviving contemporary text, Bodleian manuscript Laud miscellaneous 597, kindly loaned by David Starkey. In every manuscript a space was left, in the section on the Guard, for a crucial figure which was never inserted. This omission necessitated further searches elsewhere.

The yeomen's functions in serving as part of the armed forces were traced through payments made by the treasurer for war and the treasurer of the Chamber, through other Exchequer accounts and the State Papers of Henry VIII, together with evidence of rewards granted expressly for such service, shown in the royal accounts. These original sources were supplemented by information found in printed material. The activities of the yeomen holding local offices were investigated, and several of the original records which they kept were located and examined. These included the accounts of county escheators, bailiffs of towns or hundreds [Ministers' accounts], and customs officials in various ports. Again, these original documents were augmented by published material.

In addition to the quest for details on the Guard as an institution, extensive searches were made for information on its personnel. The names of individuals serving in the Guard were collected from the calendars already mentioned, from the original manuscripts of the treasurer of the Chamber's accounts, various classes of Exchequer records, and warrants to the keeper of the Great Wardrobe. The latter also supplied the name of the captain of the Guard at the time. Assessments of the yeomen's personal wealth were extracted from subsidy lists for the personnel of the royal household, and in some cases from county lists. In addition, copies of individual wills were searched at the Public Record Office, Guildhall Library, and the Westminster City Archives, as well as in printed sources. Photo copies of three wills were obtained from the Hereford and Worcester Record Office. Details of the yeomen's families were sought, in genealogical publications such as those of the Harleian Society and Surtees Society, and in other published collections of county histories.

Legal cases involving members of the Guard were examined, in the records of the Chancery, the Court of Star Chamber, the Court of Requests, the Court of Augmentations and Court of General Surveyors: Miscellaneous. These provided an insight into the relationships between the yeomen and their neighbours, and the difficulties encountered by each. Some cases appeared also in printed sources.

This thesis aims to remove some of the misconceptions which have been current for many years about the royal bodyguard of the yeomen of the Guard in the time of the first two Tudor monarchs, and to show that the Guard's significance extended far beyond the ceremonial role which some historians have supposed was its only function.
Chapter 1

Foundation of the Guard

This chapter starts by analysing the statements made by contemporary authors on the Guard’s origins, and considers the factors which may have influenced Henry Tudor in founding a new bodyguard. The earliest references to the Guard which appear in contemporary documents are then presented, and the constitution of the Guard is described. After discussing methods of recruitment, a summary of the ancient offices of yeomen of the Chamber and yeomen of the crown introduces the evidence which indicates how these two groups of royal servants were closely associated with the yeomen of the Guard.

Origins: Early Opinions

Polydore Vergil included in his history of England, written during the early years of the sixteenth century, the statement that Henry VII was the first English king to appoint retainers, to the number of about 200, to be a bodyguard, which he incorporated in his household so that they should never leave his side.1 Edward Hall, writing slightly later in the sixteenth century, reported that Henry VII ‘constituted and ordained a certain number of good archers and other persons being hardy, strong, and of agility, to give daily attendance on his person, whom he named yeomen of his guard’.2 Neither writer actually indicated precisely when Henry VII instituted this new bodyguard. In his History of the Reign of King Henry the Seventh, Francis Bacon declared that the yeomen of the Guard, consisting of 50 archers under a captain, were instituted by Henry VII on the day of his coronation, which took place on 30 October 1485.3 One point on which Vergil was incorrect was his assertion that Henry VII was the first English king to appoint a bodyguard of retainers in his household, since we know that Richard II had such a bodyguard nearly a century before. Hall, however, appears to be completely accurate, even to the extent of naming the new corps. Both authors gave the impression that the corps was for the protection of the king, and neither suggested that it was instituted for ceremonial purposes. Nevertheless, Bacon stated that Henry VII intended the Guard to be seen rather as a ‘matter of dignity than any matter of diffidence appropriate to his own case’, and to be ‘understood for an ordinance not temporary but to hold in succession for ever after’.4

3. Bacon, p.35.
4. Ibid.
No official documentation on the Guard’s foundation appears to have survived, if indeed any ever existed. We can only speculate on the reasons why Henry VII wished to set up a new bodyguard and why he envisaged it as a permanent corps. As already stated, the sergeants at arms and the yeomen of the crown survived as royal servants, and they continued under all the Tudors. Henry VII must have been well aware that Richard III was inadequately protected in his last battle, even allowing for Richard’s impetuous charge beyond the line of his own forces to attack Henry personally and for the desertion of many of his supporters.

According to both Vergil and Hall, the yeomen of the Guard were modelled on the bodyguard of the French king, and Bacon indicates that Henry was imitating what he had known abroad.¹ Henry Tudor, while earl of Richmond, had spent about a year in France, following thirteen years in exile in Brittany. By this time he was a contender for the English throne, and Charles VIII of France in due course provided him with military aid.

While in France, Henry Tudor would have learned of the organization of the French army as well as of the French court. In 1445 Charles VII had instituted a group of 15 ordnance companies, to form a permanent army. Two of these companies had been established some twenty years earlier and were composed entirely of Scots men. One of these consisted of 100 men-at-arms, while the other was the king’s personal bodyguard of 104 archers, under a Scots captain, known as the ‘Compagnie Ecossaise de la garde du Corps du Roi’. The foundation of the Scots men-at-arms and of the Scots bodyguard was later stated by Louis XII to have been an acknowledgment of the service the Scots had rendered to Charles VII, and of the great loyalty they showed.² In 1474 Louis XI formed a further company of 100 gentlemen, each with two archers. Although these gentlemen shared bodyguard duties with the Scots guard, the latter always remained the senior bodyguard. The archers were detached from the gentlemen in 1475 to form a separate company, and this latter body was the one compared by Samuel Pegge with the yeomen of the Guard.³ Closer parallels can be seen, however, between the French king’s Scots guard and the English king’s Guard. The personnel of both were described as archers, though they also bore swords and halberds, both were part of the royal retinue, marching or riding immediately following the king, and both were used for ceremonial purposes, when they were arrayed in richly embellished and embroidered jackets, displaying

¹ Vergil, p.7; Hall, p.425; Bacon, p.35.
³ Forbes-Leith, p.140; Pegge, Curialia, pp.4-5, citing Pere Daniel, Histoire de la Milice Francoise, Tom. II, p.102, and Montfaucun, Monumens de la Monarchie Francoise, Tom. III.

compagnies d'ordonnance
one of the royal badges. See Illustration 2, p.13, for the French king's Guard, and Illustration 3, p.60, for the English Guard. In addition, both of these royal bodyguards incorporated a select group of 24 men who received a special fee, which will be described later.

Bacon indicates that in founding the Guard Henry VII gave emphasis to the dignity of its ceremonial role, rather than to his own need for special protection. Apart from his wish to play down this need, there may have been a further reason for giving prominence to the Guard as a ceremonial body. Since Henry was thought to have emulated the French king, by instituting a bodyguard which would add to the splendour of his court, some contemporaries may have surmised that he would also follow the example of the French king in establishing a standing army, to which the English had a traditional aversion. If Bacon is right in saying that Henry emphasized the ceremonial role of the Guard, this may have been a covert attempt to allay fears that he was beginning to set up a standing army.

Nevertheless, quite apart from any other reason, since time immemorial the importance of a European ruler had been reflected in the display of wealth and magnificence at his court, including his retinue, particularly as seen by visiting dignitaries and diplomats. While the Burgundian court had earlier been reputedly the most magnificent in Europe, it was rivalled by the French court at this time, and there is some evidence that Henry was known to favour French procedures, even after some years on the English throne. For instance, when the Spanish diplomat Ayala wrote to King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella on 25 July 1498, he commented that Henry VII 'would like to govern England in the French fashion but he cannot'. The foundation of the Guard, however, may perhaps be seen as a successful example of this inclination. Perhaps also, since the French royal bodyguard had served successive monarchs from 1425, the English king envisaged a similar permanent institution for the Tudor dynasty which he hoped to found. Henry Tudor was anxious to establish himself securely on the throne which he had won in combat as the Lancastrian representative, and to demonstrate his authority as a monarch of some significance among the European rulers. His own observations at the courts in Brittany and France would have increased his awareness of the importance of visual display as an effective indication of a monarch's power and prestige. The new bodyguard was therefore probably modelled in the French fashion to enhance the status of the new English sovereign, wearing his livery colours of white and green.

2. Bacon, p.35.
3. Anglo, pp.104-5.
Illustration 2. Soldier of the French king's Scots bodyguard during Francis I's reign

From J. Quicherat, Histoire du Costume en France (Paris, 1877). Forbes-Leith gives the colours of the tunic as yellow, blue and rose, the hat black and the shoes white. Francis I's symbol of the crowned salamander was embroidered in gold.
The Guard's foundation and constitution

The earliest references to the yeomen of the Guard in official sources date from September 1485. These are contained in signet warrants, or signed bills, from the king to the keeper of the Privy Seal, directing him to send letters to the chancellor authorizing the preparation of letters patent granting offices of various kinds to certain individuals. The first of these warrants was dated 16 September 1485, appointing John Frye, one of the yeomen of the king's Guard, to the office of searcher in the port of Bristol,1 and the second, dated 18 September, appointed William Brown, 'yeoman of our guard', bailiff of the lordship of Brailes, Warwickshire.2 In the same month similar bills, and privy seal letters, granted offices to a further 20 individuals described as yeomen of the king's Guard.3 These documents authorizing the grants of office, together with the resultant letters patent, therefore represent firm evidence that the bodyguard was in existence within a month of Henry VII's accession to the throne. Nine more grants were made to yeomen of the king's Guard during October and November, and a further one in January 1486, making a total of 32 identifiable members of the bodyguard in the first few months of the reign.4 [See Table 1, p.15.]

In many grants, however, the recipient is described merely as king's servant, or is not described at all. Identification may be difficult in these cases but this is sometimes resolved by a later document obviously referring to the same person, and some of these individuals subsequently appear in further grants where they are described as yeomen of the Guard. One example is that of Robert Jay, who was given no description in a grant of 21 September 1485,5 but on 6 October following, when granted further offices, he was described as one of the yeomen of the Guard.6 Similarly, John Carre on 22 September appeared without description,7 but was shown as yeoman of the Guard on 6 October.8 Therefore it is possible that some individuals who received only one grant, in which they were not precisely described, could also have been members of the Guard. Others may not have received any grant at this time, so remain unrecorded.

Apart from information in grants of office, identification may be established by reference to another official source. For instance, when John Lewes and Walter ap Lewes were granted
Table 1: Yeomen of the Guard named in grants during first year of Henry VII’s Reign

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Enrolled</th>
<th>Office</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>17 Nov.</td>
<td>Richard ap Philip 18 Nov. Ragler, co. of Cardigan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>21 Sept.</td>
<td>John Byrne 24 Sept. Water bailiff, Duvelyn and Drogheda, Ireland</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>John Carre* 6 Oct. Bailiff, Aylesbury, Buckinghamshire</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>16 Sept.</td>
<td>John Frye 24 Sept. Searcher, port of Bristol</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>20 Sept.</td>
<td>Thomas Fulbrooke‡ 24 Sept. Forester/ranger, Kingswood, Glos., and Fulwood, Somerset</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4 Nov.</td>
<td>Thomas Gaywood§ 8 Nov. Porter, Stafford castle; bailiff, Mawdeley and Borlstone, Staffs.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2 Nov.</td>
<td>John Hony 3 Nov. Bailiff/park keeper, Rampisham, Dorset</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>21 Sept.</td>
<td>Henry Ley 24 Sept. Park-keeper, Lanteglos and Hellesbury, Cornwall</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>20 Sept.</td>
<td>Piers Lloyd‡ 24 Sept. Corrody, St. Augustine’s monastery, Canterbury</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Robert Walsh 20 Sept. Constable, Trematon castle; havener, duchy of Cornwall</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

† a later grant shows present in victorious journey
* previous service overseas indicated in grant § present in victorious journey (culminating in battle of Bosworth)
‡ a later grant mentions service overseas offices in October and December 1485 respectively, they were not described. Both received a saving, or confirmation, of their offices, however, under Henry VII's Act of Resumption of 1485, where they were shown as yeomen of the Guard, the latter being shown as Walter Lewes.1 In the records of the duchy of Lancaster for September 1485 Nicholas Owdeby was named as an office-holder in the duchy lands and described as one of the king's Guard.2 Further sources supplying identification are contemporary records describing certain events. For example, the names are recorded of five yeomen of the Guard and of the crown who were on special duty at the christening of Prince Arthur in Winchester cathedral in September 1486:- William Racke, John Burley, Robert Walker, William Waghun [or Vaughan] and John Hoo.3 This brings the total of known members of the Guard in the first year of the reign to 40. The personnel involved will be discussed later, when the questions of recruitment and complement are examined. Meanwhile one more grant of office completes the evidence for the Guard's existence early in Henry VII's reign. Apart from the grants describing the recipient as a yeoman of the king's Guard, the Lancaster Roll shows that on 1 March 1486 the keepership of Postern park, Derby, was granted to Sir Charles Somerset, described as captain of the king's Guard.4 This is the only evidence which has been found indicating an officer of the Guard at that time, and it confirms Bacon's statement that the Guard was under a captain.

While the sources so far described prove the existence of the Guard at this time, a document, probably of 1536/7, provides some evidence of the Guard's foundation. This document is a draft order for the establishment of the gentlemen at arms, eventually instituted at the end of December 1539. The document is endorsed: 'An order taken for 100 gentlemen to wait upon the king's highness'. It begins by making a comparison with the Guard, and states that 'the most noble and memory worthy king Henry VII for the better furnishment of his house first established and ordained the yeomen of his guard in their livery coats to wait upon his grace in his chamber, to the great setting forth and honour of his house'.5

The statements made by Hall and by Bacon that the Guard was founded by Henry VII are therefore confirmed by the evidence contained in this document. Bacon's assertion that the

3. BL Additional Ms. 6113, f.76v; see also Leland, iv, p.205, and The Antiquarian Repertory, 4 vols. (1775-84), iv, p.194.
Guard was instituted on the day of Henry VII’s coronation presumably means that its first appearance took place then. The records for this event show signs of hasty preparation, a copy of the regulations for Richard III’s coronation being used as a draft which was imperfectly adapted. While the yeomen of the Guard are not mentioned, there is a reference to yeomen of the crown and yeomen of the Chamber ‘in a great number’. The significance of this will become apparent later.

Since the bodyguard was attached to the king’s Chamber, it came under the overall jurisdiction of the lord chamberlain, who was responsible for all Chamber staff. The lord chamberlain also had responsibility for the protection of the sovereign, as well as for ceremonial events. Before the post of vice-chamberlain was formally established, provision was made for an usher to act as deputy to the lord chamberlain in the latter’s absence. During Edward IV’s time Roger Ray (later Sir Roger) had deputized in this way, and Henry VII’s household ordinances of 1493 stipulated that ‘In the absence of the chamberlain the usher shall have the same power to command in like manner.’ In the ‘book of the earl of Arundel’, lord chamberlain to Henry VIII, which was said to be a copy of a book of Henry VII’s chamberlain (Giles, Lord Daubeney), there is a reference to ‘my said lord chamberlain or his said deputy if he have any or any of the said ushers’. Although Sir Richard Guildford was described as vice-chamberlain of the king’s Chamber in an Exchequer account of 1488, the establishment of this office remains elusive. It is evident, however, that Sir Charles Somerset, already named as captain of the Guard in 1486, was acting as vice-chamberlain by 1498. Before the end of Henry VII’s reign, therefore, the posts of vice-chamberlain and captain of the Guard were held by the same person. While this dual role became usual, it was not invariable, as will be shown.

Sources of recruitment to the Guard

There appear to be no official documents referring to initial appointment to serve in the royal bodyguard. The first members of the Guard, in particular, must have been carefully selected, and known personally by the king or by one of his confidants. Who were these men, and how were they recruited? One source of recruitment to the Guard was from the trusted servants and supporters who had already joined the Lancastrian claimant, both before and

---

1. BL Egerton Ms. 985, f.2v; see also BL Additional Ms. 18,669, f.1v; S. Anglo, Spectacle, Pageantry, and Early Tudor Policy (Oxford, 1969), pp.12-13.
2. Myers, p.32, footnote 3; p.90.
4. BL Harley Ms. 4107, f.132v.
5. E405/76, f.2r. See Leland, iv, p.243.
after the rebellion of 1483, and eventually fought for his cause at Bosworth field. After the execution of the duke of Buckingham following the earl of Richmond's abortive attempt at a landing in England in 1483, many Lancastrian supporters involved fled to the continent, to join the exiled earl and to escape the retributions of Richard III.\(^1\) According to Commines, the earl of Richmond had a retinue of 500 while in Brittany,\(^2\) and Vergil records that initially about 300 of the Englishmen remained at Vannes when Henry Tudor fled secretly from Brittany to France.\(^3\) Many of the grants to royal servants in the first few months of Henry VII's reign refer to service overseas. Of the 32 earliest grants to the members of the Guard, 13 refer to former service overseas, and 6 indicate their presence at Bosworth field. [See Table 1, p.15.] The other 13 grants mention good and faithful service, which could include either service overseas or presence at the victorious battle, or both.

A second source of recruitment was evidently by selection from men who were known to a member of the aristocracy, perhaps by service in his household or in his retinue. Young men of some standing were sent to the households of nobles and gentlemen to be trained in the duties attached to attendance upon aristocrats, in a civilian as well as a military capacity, and to improve their chances of social advancement. Evidence of this source of recruitment for royal service is provided in household ordinances of both Edward IV and Henry VIII, where it is enacted that officers' servants brought into court should be of good personage, honest, and cleanly clad, so that they could be admitted to the king's service if suit were made for them.\(^4\)
Direct reference to the Guard was made in a letter sent to Henry VII in about 1505 by John Flamank, servant and son-in-law to Sir Richard Nanfan, the deputy at Calais. Flamank referred to a statement made by Hugh Conway, treasurer at Calais, that the greater part of the Guard were formerly the servants of the lord chamberlain (Giles, Lord Daubeney).\(^5\) This was probably an exaggeration, but it might suggest that the lord chamberlain's household acted as a conduit whereby men from many different households were introduced to royal service. The ideal was perhaps indicated in Edward IV's Black Book, where the yeomen of the crown were stated to be:-

'bold men, chosen and tried out of every lord's house in England for their cunning and virtue'.\(^6\)

1. Ellis, pp. 200-209.
2. S. Kinser, ed., and I. Cazeaux, transl., The Memoirs of Philippe de Commynes, i (Columbia, S. Carolina,
3. Ellis, p.207.
4. HO, pp.67 and 239.
1863) [hereafter LP Richard III and Henry VII], i, p.232.
This statement bears a resemblance to a description of the yeomen of the Guard dating from 1501 on the occasion of Prince Arthur's wedding:-

'... chosen persons of the whole country ...' 1

Some household servants remained in, or were re-appointed to, their positions in the royal household in successive reigns. Among a number of Henry VII's yeomen of the crown who had served previous monarchs were William Knight,2 Piers Warton,3 and John Davy.4

Yeomen of the Guard, Crown and Chamber

Although the Guard does not feature in Henry VII's household ordinances of 1493, it appears in those of Henry VIII's time, portions of which have been identified by David Starkey as originating between 1494 and 1501.5 These ordinances are contained in a manuscript at the College of Arms, of which two slightly varying copies are in the British Library. One of the sections in these ordinances is headed 'The room and service belonging to yeomen of the crown of the Guard and of the king's chamber to do'.6 This heading indicates the close relationship between the three categories of royal servants named, which needs to be clarified before proceeding further. The actual duties referred to will be described in chapter 3.

The yeomen of the Chamber had existed as a group of royal servants at least since Edward II's time, and they continued throughout the reigns of the Tudor monarchs. The number of yeomen of the Chamber varied at different times. Edward II apparently had eight, which was the complement given in Henry VI's household ordinances of 1454,7 when the establishment was drastically reduced, the previous ordinances of 1445 having allowed 24, of whom 12 were to be continually at court.8 In contrast, Edward IV's Black Book specified only four yeomen of the Chamber.9 These figures are known to have been exceeded, however.10

3. CPR Yorkist, pp.1, 100, 136.
4. Ibid., p.258; Horrox, p.244.
6. College of Arms [hereafter CA] Ms. Arundel XVII/2; BL Additional Ms. 34,319 and BL Harley Ms. 4107. This particular section is not given in the latter manuscript, but appears in CA Ms. M.8, BL Additional Ms. 21,116, BL Harley Ms. 2210 and Royal Society [hereafter RS] Ms. 61.
8. Myers, pp.70-71.
10. HO, p.39; Myers, pp.117 and 233 (footnote 42).
Probably the greatest increase took place between about 1438 and 1448, when Henry VI's yeomen of the Chamber rose from 28 to 71.¹

Rosemary Horrox has indicated that in Richard III's household 'a yeoman of the Chamber was a yeoman of the crown who had been assigned to duties in the Chamber'.² This also appears to be true of Henry VII's household, as an examination of the records of the Great Wardrobe shows. These include warrants from the king to the keeper of the Great Wardrobe, authorizing the issue of five yards of material described as russet cloth or tawny medley worth 4s. a yard, for 'watching clothing' to the Chamber personnel (yeomen ushers, yeomen, grooms and pages), all of whom are named under their respective headings. Although livery of cloth for watching clothing was given annually, only three of these documents survive for Henry VII's reign, for the years 1496, 1502 and 1508,³ together with a similar warrant for black cloth on the occasion of Elizabeth of York's funeral in 1503.⁴ Significantly, the captain of the Guard is also included in the warrants for 1502 and 1508, receiving 6 yards of French tawny worth 13s. 4d. a yard, with fur. The totals of yeomen of the Chamber listed in these warrants are shown in Table 2. A comparison of the names of yeomen ushers and yeomen listed in these warrants with the names of yeomen of the crown and yeomen of the Guard known from other sources reveals that many are identical.

As already indicated in the Introduction, yeomen of the crown were the successors to the ancient foot archers of the English kings. The term 'yeomen of the crown' can itself cause some confusion, because not all were appointed in the same way. Several records of Henry VII's time refer to 'one of the 24 yeomen of the crown at 6d. a day',⁵ which seems to imply that the number was restricted to 24, as stated in Edward IV's Black Book. The restriction, however, was on the number who received the 'fee of the crown'. This particular fee will be described

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Yeomen ushers</th>
<th>Yeomen</th>
<th>Reference</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1496</td>
<td>8</td>
<td>67</td>
<td>E101/414/8, f.53</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1502</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>53</td>
<td>E101/415/7, f.152</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1508</td>
<td>8</td>
<td>73</td>
<td>E101/416/7, unfol.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

³. E101/414/8, f.53; E101/415/7, f.152; E101/416/7, unfoliated.
⁴. LC 2/1, fos. 61r-61v.
⁵. E407/6/137, m.14; C82/128; CPR Henry VII, ii, p.22.
after the discussion of wage payments. For the present purpose of identification it is sufficient to note that fairly full records survive throughout Henry VII's reign for the relatively small number of yeomen in receipt of the fee of the crown. When one of these yeomen died or surrendered his patent, his crown fee was granted by patent to another yeoman of the crown. It is therefore possible to follow the succession of most of these particular yeomen throughout the reign. [See Table 3.] Again, a comparison of the names with those of yeomen of the Chamber in the Wardrobe warrants shows a close agreement. [See Table 4, p.22.]

Table 3: Yeomen of the crown in receipt of the crown fee in Henry VII's Reign

Starred names are of earliest yeomen to be appointed. Where no names follow, this shows they continued into the next reign.

Paid from the Exchequer

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Name</th>
<th>Dates</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>John Almer*</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William Almer*</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Amyas*</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Brereton*</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thomas Caldewell*</td>
<td>John Holland 1496 - John Jevan 1502</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William Cope*</td>
<td>[disappears from accounts by Easter 1489]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nicholas Dounton</td>
<td>[from Easter 1489] - surrendered patent to Edmond Huntwade 1495</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Forde*</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Gittons</td>
<td>[from Easter 1489] - Richard Davy 1501 - Walter Cunye June 1509</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>David Gough</td>
<td>[from Easter 1490] - Robert Nevell June 1509</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Robert Harrison</td>
<td>[from Easter 1489] - John Gildon 1502 - William Keby May 1509</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William Knight*</td>
<td>[died 1495] - Turner or Page (see below)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Henry Ley*</td>
<td>- Henry Strete 1503</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Piers Lloyd</td>
<td>[from Michaelmas 1487] - Henry Hopkins 1504</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Monkeley*</td>
<td>- John Geffron 1502</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Richard Rake*</td>
<td>- William Kingston 1497 - William Rolte July 1509</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Stanshaw*</td>
<td>[disappears from accounts by Easter 1489]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Robert Walker*</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Piers Warton*</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Wattles*</td>
<td>- John Sandford 1510 (on surrender by Wattles)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Benedict Weaver*</td>
<td>- died 1505; no successor found until John Braband July 1509</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Whittington</td>
<td>[from Easter 1491]</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Paid from other sources

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Name</th>
<th>Dates</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>John Punche*</td>
<td>- David Gough 1490</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Edwardes*</td>
<td>- Thomas Broke May 1509</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Upcote*</td>
<td>- John Whittington 1491</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thomas Harper*</td>
<td>- ?</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Table 4: Henry VII's yeomen of the crown in receipt of the crown fee who are listed as yeomen of the Chamber

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Name</th>
<th>Other Name</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>[illegible] Adams</td>
<td>William Almer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Amyas</td>
<td>Thomas Broke</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Richard David [Davy]</td>
<td>John Edwards</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Evan [Jevan]</td>
<td>John Forde</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Geffron</td>
<td>John Gildon</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>David Gough</td>
<td>John Holland</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Henry Hopkins</td>
<td>Edmond Huntwade</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nicholas Jackson</td>
<td>William Keby</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William Kingston</td>
<td>Piers Lloyd</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Monkeley</td>
<td>Robert Nevell</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William Page</td>
<td>Henry Strete</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oliver Turner</td>
<td>Piers Warton</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Robert Washington</td>
<td>John Watts</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Whittington</td>
<td>John Wortley</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The names of fifty yeomen of the crown and five yeomen of the Chamber not so far identified as yeomen of the Guard can be gathered from grants up to the end of 1486, from the Act of Resumption, and from records of the duchy of Lancaster.\(^1\) Of the fifty yeomen of the crown named, seventeen were in receipt of the crown fee at the time. From these sources and later grants, as well as from the warrants to the Great Wardrobe already cited, it becomes clear that there are many examples where the same man appears in official documents with varying descriptions. For instance, Henry Ley was described as one of the king’s Guard in a patent of 21 September 1485, appointing him keeper of two parks in Cornwall, but as a yeoman of the crown when granted the crown fee in the following month.\(^2\) When Piers Lloyd was granted a corrody in the monastery of St. Augustine, Canterbury, on 20 September 1485 he was described as ‘one of the yeomen of the king’s Chamber and of the king’s Guard’, but in June 1487 a patent granting him an office at Calais showed him as a yeoman of the crown.\(^3\)

The use of these varying descriptions for the same man continued into Henry VIII’s reign. Henry Strete was described as a yeoman of the crown in February 1501 and January 1502; he was granted the crown fee in August 1502, and received livery of cloth as a yeoman of the Chamber in December 1502, and February 1503.\(^4\) He again appeared as a yeoman of the crown when granted offices in Devon in June 1508, and in December of that year he was described as

---

1. Campbell, i and ii, passim; CPR Henry VII, i, passim; Rot. Parl., vi; Somerville, i.
2. C82/2; Campbell, i, pp.49-50; CPR Henry VII, i, p.30; C82/3, m.136.
3. C82/2; Campbell, i, p.15; Campbell, ii, p.158.
4. E404/83; E404/84; CPR Henry VII, ii, p.261; E101/415/7, f.152; LC 2/1, f.61. a yeoman usher of the Chamber. In May 1509 he received livery of black cloth as a yeoman of the Guard for Henry VII's funeral, while a grant of November 1511 showed him once more as a yeoman of the crown. A further example is that of John Braband, who was described as a yeoman of the Guard when granted the fee of the crown in July 1509, a yeoman of the Chamber when granted an office in Devon the following October, and again as a yeoman of the Guard when granted further offices a year later. In addition, a number of those usually described as yeomen of the crown were included in the list of yeomen of the Guard who received livery of black cloth for Henry VII's funeral in May 1509. Among these were Robert Brickenden or Brigandyne, clerk of the king's ships, and sixteen of the yeomen currently receiving the fee of the crown. These were John Almer, William Almer, John Amyas, John Brereton, John Evan, John Forde, John Geffron, Edmond Huntwade, Henry Strete, Robert Walker, Piers Warton; Thomas Broke, Nicholas Jackson, William Keb, Robert Nevell and John Wortley. Yeomen of the crown did not therefore form a completely exclusive group, inasmuch as yeomen of the Guard and yeomen of the Chamber were included among them. In other words, the term 'yeomen of the crown' covered a group of royal retainers, any of whom were liable to serve as yeomen of the Chamber or yeomen of the Guard.

It may now be seen that, with the inclusion of those described as yeomen of the crown or yeomen of the Chamber, the names of yeomen of the Guard identifiable in the early years of Henry VII's reign can be increased substantially. The evidence cited, from the varying descriptions in grants and even from the few lists available, shows the strong correlation of names between these three groups. Although it cannot be stated categorically that all those described as yeomen of the crown also served as yeomen of the Guard, or yeomen of the Chamber, it seems feasible to include them in view of the overwhelming evidence found where this has proved to be the case. Nevertheless some caution has been exercised in this respect, and the bulk of the material used in this thesis has concentrated on those who have been described on at least one occasion as a yeoman of the Guard. Where no such reference has been found for an individual, his description is given. Appendix B differentiates between those described specifically as yeomen of the Guard on at least one occasion, those described as yeomen of the Chamber, and those described only as yeomen of the crown.

1. CPR Henry VII, ii, p.558; E101/416/7; LC 2/1, f.123r; LP I i, 969 (20).
2. LP I, 249; LP I i, 132 (9); LP I, 571; LP I, 1255.
3. LC 2/1, f.134r.
4. Ibid., f.123r.
5. Ibid., f.122v.
Conclusion

While it is clear that the yeomen of the Guard represented a new bodyguard, created by Henry VII to be in constant attendance, it was adapted from existing structures within the household. The king evidently took care not to abolish the older offices of yeomen of the crown and yeomen of the Chamber, but combined them with his new retinue, which perhaps he regarded as a form of modernization, fashioned on the French model. The members of the Guard were selected for their proven loyalty as well as for their strength and martial skills. With the exception of Richard II, it was probably the largest bodyguard that any English king had had in peace-time. Although the yeomen were assigned to certain duties in the personal service of the king, the ancient protective function of the yeomen of the crown was specifically retained for the new corps. A greater prominence was given to the Guard by using it also as a splendidly arrayed retinue, wearing the Tudor livery, to enhance the reputation of the court and of its ruler. The role of the Guard, however, extended far beyond the confines of the household and court, its individual members being involved in many aspects of royal activities, both in peace and in war. These will be explored in chapters 3 and 4. Meanwhile the wages, fees and other benefits received by the Guard will be described in the next chapter.
Chapter 2

Remuneration and Development of the Guard

In this chapter methods of wage payments to the Guard are first discussed, and rates of remuneration shown. Details are then given of additional fees and benefits received by some of the yeomen, followed by a section describing further rewards and privileges accorded to them. The question of the Guard's original size is next discussed, showing estimates quoted by contemporary writers and evidence from various contemporary manuscript sources, including wages accounts. This is followed by an account of the Guard's development over the two reigns, including a substantial section on the Eltham ordinances of 1526, and ending with a short description of the Guard's officers.

Remuneration

(a) Wages

No wages accounts survive for the Guard in the earliest part of the reign, but from 1493, when the king's revenue system was being reorganized, references occur to wage payments for the Guard. A series of warrants from the king to Lord Dynham, treasurer of the Exchequer, indemnified John Dawtrey, one of the customers at the port of Southampton, for payments which he had been commanded to make from the revenues of the port. These included a sum of £1,200, paid annually, for the wages of the yeomen of the Guard. The first of these warrants is dated 9 June 1493.1 In the second one, dated 13 December 1494, it is stated that the king gave his instruction to Dawtrey orally as well as by letter.2 Apparently many commands were given in this informal way in Henry VII's time, and even accounts were declared orally before his most trusted servants, such as Sir Reynold Bray and Sir Robert Southwell.3 This helps to explain to some extent the absence of written records. The first three warrants indicate an evolving procedure, stating variously that the sums were paid 'to the yeomen of our Guard' or 'to our hands', or 'for the use of the yeomen of our Guard'.4 From the warrant of 5 December

1. E404/81/2
2. E404/81/3.
4. E404/81/2; E404/81/3; E404/82.
1496 each one invariably shows that the money was paid to John Heron, treasurer of the Chamber.\(^1\)

In Heron's earliest surviving accounts the statement appears in October 1495 that 'John Dawtrey, customer of Hampton, shall pay the king yearly of the Custom of Hampton assigned for the wages of the yeomen of the crown £1,200'.\(^2\) Heron's receipts for November 1502 and December 1504 also show the same amount from Dawtrey, as wages of the yeomen of the Guard.\(^3\) In addition, from September 1495 Heron's accounts show the monthly wages paid to the yeomen of the Chamber.\(^4\) If these are added together for a whole year they amount to a sum of approximately £1,000. For the year September 1505 to August 1506, for example, a total of £1,075.13s. 8d. was paid.\(^5\) The annual provision of £1,200 for the Guard's wages therefore corresponds to the approximate annual total of monthly wages recorded in the accounts of the treasurer of the Chamber for the yeomen of the Chamber. Once again it can be seen how the yeomen were variously described in official sources.

Although it is not possible to state how the yeomen were paid during the first ten years of the reign, Heron's accounts commencing in September 1495 show varying monthly wage totals, which indicate that the yeomen were paid according to attendance. The accounts of the treasurer of the Chamber do not normally show the individual rate paid, but two levels of 12d. and 8d. a day are clearly indicated for the eight months from February to September 1506.\(^6\) From the payment for October a single total is again shown.\(^7\) The total sums paid to yeomen receiving 12d. a day during the months of February to September ranged from about £77-£80, representing 55-57 yeomen, while the totals for those receiving 8d. a day were about £15-£20, representing 16-19 yeomen, so the majority were paid at the higher level. There is no indication whether the lower rate was paid for a specific duty or to yeomen who were junior in service or less skilled.

Similar instances occur in Henry VIII's time. From February to May 1513, 'certain yeomen of the chamber', were paid at 8d. a day\(^8\) but again no reason is indicated. An entry in the royal accounts for June 1515 shows three levels of payment to the yeomen of the Chamber, at 12d.,

\(^1\) E404/82, /83, /84, /85, /86.
\(^2\) E101/414/6, f.107.
\(^3\) E101/413/2 (3), p.21.
\(^4\) E101/414/6, fos.3r, 7r, 12r, 15v.
\(^5\) E36/214, fos.4r, 6v, 9v, 13v, 19v, 22v, 25v, 29r, 33r, 38r, 44v, 49r.
\(^6\) E36/214, fos.22v, 25v, 29r, 33r, 38r, 44v, 49r, 51r.
\(^7\) Ibid., f.53v.
\(^8\) E36/215, fos.118r, 123r, 125v, 128v.
8d., and 6d. a day, but this is the only example found. Differences in wages within the Guard also occurred in times of war, when payment was made by the treasurer for war, rather than the treasurer of the Chamber. These will be specified in chapter 4. Yeomen of the Guard continued to receive wages of 12d. or 8d. a day until 1540, when an annual rate of £24 was introduced.

There are many instances where yeomen of the Guard were paid when they were sick. In Henry VII's time the royal accounts show, for example, that a sum of £4.10s. was paid to five sick yeomen in May 1497, and nine yeomen received a total of £8. 2s. in July 1499. Individuals are named in the accounts during Henry VIII's reign. Thomas Ferror received £6 in July 1515, in respect of his wages for 120 days at 12d. a day 'which the king's grace hath given unto him in reward towards his recovery of his sickness', and Hugh Troublefeld was paid £4.17s. for his wages of 12d. a day for 97 days in 1531, 'in all which time he was sick'.

The yeomen of the Guard were relatively well paid. The master of the barge and the sergeant of the minstrels were each paid at 7d. a day, while ordinary soldiers received 6d. a day. The sergeants at arms, who were often recruited by promotion from the Guard, received 12d. a day, being appointed for life by patent.

It is also evident from the accounts of the treasurer of the Chamber that during Henry VII's reign the cash for the wages was paid to one of the yeomen ushers of the Chamber, to distribute to his colleagues. The cash was received by Edward Griffith in October and December 1495 and by Thomas Greenhow in February and March 1496. In addition to exercising a supervisory role in the Chamber the yeomen ushers therefore bore some responsibility within the Guard. The duty of paying the yeomen from money received from the treasurer of the Chamber later became the responsibility of the clerk of the cheque to the Guard, an office which was probably introduced towards the end of Henry VII's reign, and which will be discussed later.

1. BL Additional Ms. 21,481, f.191r; E36/215, f.192r (shows 171 yeomen, but the Additional Ms. shows the final digit crossed through).
2. LC 5/178, p.90.
3. E101/414/6, f.70v.
4. E101/414/16, f.68r.
5. E36/215, f.195v; E101/417/7, m.92.
7. E407/6/137, m.15.
8. E101/414/6, fos.3r and 12r.
9. Ibid., fos.19r and 22r.
(b) Fee of the crown

Before proceeding further, the payment of the fee of the crown should be described. This was paid at the rate of 6d. a day, and was received by no more than 24 yeomen at any one time. These yeomen were appointed for life by letters patent, and were paid half-yearly at Easter and Michaelmas from the Exchequer, irrespective of their presence on duty. In a few cases this fee was paid from local revenues due to the king rather than directly from the Exchequer. John Punche, for instance, received his fee from the customs and subsidies of the port of Poole,\(^1\) and John Upcote was paid from the revenues of Cornwall.\(^2\)

The payment of the crown fee to 24 yeomen shows another parallel with the French king’s Scots guard referred to in chapter 1, since the 24 most senior members of that bodyguard received a special payment of twenty crowns a month.\(^3\) This remuneration therefore suggests that the English recipients held some seniority in the Guard. Nevertheless, a striking example of a yeoman who had to wait for a vacancy may be seen in Lawrence Eglisfeld. He served as clerk of the cheque to the Guard from 1513, having become a yeoman usher of the Chamber by January 1512, but did not receive the crown fee until January 1527.\(^4\)

(c) Other fees

While the ‘fee of the crown’ in Tudor times was 6d. a day, certain yeomen received wages of 3d. a day. The accounts of Sir Thomas Lovell, treasurer of the Chamber, show that he received £50 on 10 June 1495 from the customers of Poole for the wages of the yeomen at 3d. a day, due at Easter.\(^5\) A statement in the accounts of John Heron, Lovell’s successor in office, dated 1 October 1495, shows that ‘the cofferer shall answer the king yearly for the wages of the 33 yeomen of the crown after 3d. by day due at Michaelmas £100’.\(^6\) In 1503 and 1504 Heron’s receipts show a payment of £100 from William Cope, cofferer, as ‘wages of certain yeomen of the Chamber at 3d. a day for one year’.\(^7\) The total of £100 per annum in fact corresponds to 22 yeomen at 3d. a day rather than 33. There is evidence in Henry VIII’s time that yeomen ushers of the Chamber received an extra fee of 3d. a day above the wage paid for each day of service, and perhaps these accounts refer to this fee. When John Bromefeld replaced John Willesdon as a yeoman usher early in 1546, his fee for the office was shown as 3d. a day.\(^8\)

\(^1\) Campbell, i, p.51; CPR Henry VII, i, p.8.
\(^2\) CPR Henry VII, i, p.37.
\(^3\) Forbes-Leith, i, p.75.
\(^4\) LP IV ii, 2839 (12).
\(^5\) E101/413/2 (2), f.88v.
\(^6\) E101/414/6, f.108; BL Additional Ms. 59,899, f.184v.
\(^7\) E101/413/2 (3), pp.98 and 175.
\(^8\) SP 4/1 (79); LP XX ii, 1067 (79); LP XXI i, 148 (79).
yeoman usher of the Chamber, by his will of 9 October 1534, bequeathed to his son-in-law the wages due to him at the end of December from the paymaster of the Guard, John Williams, as well as his wages at 3d. a day from the cofferer’s clerk.\(^1\) Payment at this rate was also made to yeomen holding miscellaneous offices in the royal household such as wardrobe keeper to a royal child. On 1 May 1515 William Lambert, presumably the yeoman of the Guard of that name, was paid 3d. a day for a whole year for ‘keeping the princess’s wardrobe stuff of beds’.\(^2\)

(d) Annuities and coronies

In addition to wages and fees, the yeomen enjoyed other forms of reward from the monarch. Several received an annuity, while others were granted a corrody, or dining rights, in a religious house. Among the former were Henry Spencer and William Meghen, yeomen of the crown who were apparently otherwise unpaid. Henry Spencer was granted an annuity of £10 for life from Easter 1486, payable from the revenues of the counties of Berkshire and Oxford.\(^3\) On 20 February 1487 William Meghen was rewarded with an annuity of £8 for life for his service ‘as well at our prosperous entry into this our Realm toward our town of Shrewsbury and so forth to our most victorious field as for the good service that he intendeth to do and yet doeth to his great proper costs and charges without fee or other reward of us’. The annuity was to be paid by the farmers or occupiers of the town of Wrockwardine, Shropshire.\(^4\) In October 1485 Richard Frere was granted a corrody in Tame monastery, Oxford, and in April 1486 Robert Palmer received the grant of a corrody in the priory of Bath, Somerset.\(^5\) Henry VIII’s yeomen were rewarded in similar ways, William Studdon receiving an annuity of £10 for life in August 1513, and Edward Johnson receiving one for £9.10s. in November 1540.\(^6\) Coronies were granted to John Robards in the monastery of Vale Royal, Cheshire, in February 1532, and to William Bonde in the monastery of Cerne, Dorset, in October 1537.\(^7\)

This variation in the remuneration of the yeomen was not unusual, since there is evidence that in earlier reigns, and in later Tudor times, some servants within the same category were paid while others were unpaid. Many of Richard II’s sergeants at arms had been unpaid, and in Henry VIII’s time a sergeant at arms without fee, John Fleeming, was granted the next

---

2. E36/215, fos.150v and 188v.
4. Ibid., m.165.
5. C82/3, m.71; Campbell, i, pp.81 and 412.
6. LP I, 4385; LP I ii, 2222 (4). LP XVI, 305 (31).
7. LP V, 838 (5). LP XII ii, 1008 (24). vacancy with 12d. a day, in April 1544.¹ In addition, as David Starkey has pointed out, only five of the Privy Chamber staff of 15 were in receipt of wages before January 1526.²

Other rewards and privileges

As well as the payments already mentioned, the yeomen were often among royal servants who were rewarded by a single sum of money, irrespective of whether they received the crown fee or wages. One of those without remuneration was John Spynell, a yeoman of the crown who had evidently 'borne great costs and charges in our service ... from the beginning of our reign and afore' without recompense or reward. He was awarded the sum of £6.15s. 4d. in June 1486, to be paid from the town of Shrewsbury.³ Thomas Broke and Thomas Dey, yeomen of the Guard, received a reward of £19 on 25 November 1506,⁴ and two yeomen of the crown, Robert Harrison (in receipt of the crown fee) and William Young (without the fee), shared a reward of £60 with another royal servant in December 1493.⁵ Amounts totalling £33. 6s. 8d. were shared between three yeomen of the Chamber, John Lugar, William Studdon, and John Whalley, on 24 January 1501.⁶ Rewards were often from sums forfeited by those failing to appear before justices on a certain day, or by gaolers who allowed a prisoner to escape. Three yeomen of the Guard shared a reward of £20 in March 1500, when Thomas Winter, Richard Stapull and Thomas Basshe were granted the sum forfeited by a carter of London who failed to appear when summoned.⁷ A reward of £20 was shared in similar circumstances by Richard Lewes, John Champyne and William Catcote, three members of the Guard, in September 1546.⁸ On 25 November in an unspecified year which was probably 1508, a forfeit of £5, payable for the escape of a prisoner in Gloucestershire, was awarded to Robert Thomas of the Guard,⁹ and Maurice Eton was rewarded with the £5 fine exacted for an escape in Wales in September 1546.¹⁰

One of the privileges granted by the sovereign to the yeomen as a group of royal retainers was the payment of 40s. annually, to celebrate the feast of St. David on 1 March. This was evidently in recognition of the number of Welshmen in the Guard, and Henry VII's privy

1. LP XIX i, 442 (22).
3. E404/79, m.329; Campbell, i, p.445.
4. E404/86, m.42.
5. E404/81/3, unnumbered.
7. Ibid.
8. LP XXI ii, 199 (90).
9. E404/86, m.28.
10. LP XXI i, 963 (125).
purse expenses in 1492, 1494 and 1503 actually show the payment ‘to the Welshmen’. Later payments for the feast of St. David, recorded in Henry VIII’s privy purse accounts for the years 1530 to 1532, are shown as made to the Guard. Occasionally the Guard received a sum of money for a feast in the summer. The privy purse accounts of Henry VII’s queen, Elizabeth of York, record a payment of 20s. in August 1502 for a buck to reward the king’s Guard, and in August 1531 40s. was paid from Henry VIII’s privy purse ‘by the king’s commandment to the Guard for to eat a buck at Woodstock’. The Guard was not the only group of royal servants to receive this form of appreciation, however. In July 1516 the king rewarded the ministers and gentlemen of his Chapel with 40s. for wine, to drink with the venison he had already given to them, ‘to make merry with’. The provision of venison seems to have been a popular means of showing goodwill, since in July 1541 the king sent to the lord mayor of London, Sir William Roche, by ‘Philiper’, one of the Guard, a great stag and two fat bucks ‘to make merry with his brethren the Aldermen’.

As individuals, members of the Guard were rewarded by special gifts or payments in different personal circumstances. These might be in recompense for lost wages after prolonged absence due to illness, or following some particular misfortune. In November 1518, for instance, Sir Richard Jemingham, the deputy at Tournai, was commanded to pay to Richard Donolte, yeoman of the Guard late in the retinue of Tournai, his wages at 8d. a day from 1 October previously and henceforward, in consideration of the losses he had sustained by long sickness and by the burning of his house. The reason for Richard Heybourne’s grant of 12d. a day for life in February 1529 is not indicated. Payments to him at this rate appear in the accounts of the treasurer of the Chamber, where he is shown as ‘late of the Guard’.

Several yeomen received a gift from the king to mark the occasion of their marriage. In the accounts of Peter Curteis, keeper of the Great Wardrobe, between 1 March 1487 and 30 September 1488, Richard Newneham is shown as having received black cloth and chamlette as a gift from the king 'towards his marriage'. The custom of giving wedding clothing to royal servants is shown in the household accounts of Edward IV and in those of Elizabeth of York. In March 1502 William Pastone, page of the queen's beds, was rewarded with 40s. for the purchase of his wedding clothing. By Henry VIII's time varying sums of money were given to the yeomen on marriage. William Wynnesbury and James Gartside each received £6.13s. 4d. in June 1510 and November/December 1516 respectively. They may have been specially favoured yeomen, since later in the reign the recorded payments were less generous. In May 1531 John West received £3. 6s. 8d. and in June 1532 John Holland was rewarded with £5.

A further form of reward was the privilege of importing or exporting goods, without having to pay the usual duty. A licence was granted to John Holland and William Walesse to import 600 tons of Gascon wine or Toulouse woad in February 1514, and Walter Jago and Bartholomew Flamank were licensed to export 1,000 quarters of corn in January 1516. An example of the kind of service which preceded such grants can be seen in the details of Adam Sampson's licence to export 300 quarters of wheat, free of duty. This is shown in the privy seal document of 5 April 1531, as granted 'in consideration of the said Adam having caused to be made a ship for the king's navy, called the Trinity Guild [Trynyte Gilde], of 240 tons'. It seems likely that those granted such licences were traders or in a business venture of some kind, which will be discussed in chapter 6.

Another way in which some of the yeoman were rewarded by the king for their good service was by promotion to sergeant at arms. Appointment to this office was by letters patent, and the fee of 12d. a day was paid for life, irrespective of attendance. The majority of those who served as sergeant at arms were drawn from the Guard, and recruitment was particularly active just before a military campaign.

Several yeomen enjoyed an additional income from property leases on advantageous terms. In May 1502, for example, William Maddockes was granted, during pleasure, certain buildings and gardens in the parish of St. Giles without Cripplegate. The property did not exceed 7 marks in yearly value, but was held at a rent of one red rose annually at Midsummer. Another yeoman, John Geffron, was granted tenements of the yearly value of

3. E36/215, fos.32r and 240r.
4. PPE Henry VIII, p.131.
5. Ibid., p.218.
6. LP I, 4797.
7. LP II i, 1464.
8. LP V, 220 (7).
£10, at an annual rent of 4d., in May 1513.¹ These particular privileges will be further elaborated in chapter 6.

Members of the Guard were also able to benefit from their appointment to a variety of crown offices in the localities. Some of these offices were indicated in chapter 1, set out in Table 1, p.15, and will be fully described in chapter 5.

Towards the end of their long and loyal service, some of the yeomen received a particular appointment. Henry Spencer, yeoman of the crown, was especially valued by Henry VII, and on 29 October 1493 he was appointed for life as one of the knights of the king's alms in the royal college of Windsor, 'in consideration of his good service in his youth to Henry VI and his tribulations and losses sustained through his allegiance to Henry VI'.² Similarly, in 1542 Henry VIII granted the position of an alms-man of the foundation of the cathedral church of Canterbury to John Lufton.³ Several yeomen were appointed to serve in the Tower of London, where they were paid quarterly, at the rate of 6d. a day. An allowance of 26s. 8d. for firewood was also made to the group half-yearly.⁴ In Henry VII’s time these particular yeomen, usually numbering twelve, were referred to as ‘certain of the yeomen of our crown and Chamber giving their attendance by our commandment within our Tower of London’.⁵ During Henry VIII’s reign this description was sometimes shortened to ‘the yeomen at the Tower’;⁶ and in the latter part of the reign, when the number had increased to fourteen or sixteen, the term ‘yeomen waiters’ or ‘daily waiters’ was applied to them.⁷ Among the former yeomen of the Guard serving at the Tower in this way during the two reigns were Oliver Turner (who became porter there), John Whittington (who became under-porter and later porter), Henry Hopkins, William Maddockes, David John or Jones, John Williams, Henry Southworth, Hugh Braband and Edmond Huntwade.⁸ Most of the yeomen at the Tower can be identified as former yeomen of the Guard or yeomen of the queen’s Chamber.

Some assistance was occasionally given to widows of the yeomen. In July 1530 Elizabeth Fisher, widow of Richard Fisher, yeoman of the crown, was granted an annuity of 10 marks from the revenues of the manor of Wexcombe, Wiltshire, during the minority of Edward Darell, kinsman and heir of Sir Edward Darell.⁹ This annuity had originally been granted to

1. LP I, 3998; LP I ii, 1948 (14).
2. CPR Henry VII, i, p.455.
3. Hennell, p.83.
4. E36/215, f.86v; BL Stowe Ms. 554, f.39v; E101/417/7, m.118.
5. E101/416/7.
6. BL Stowe Ms. 554, f.36v; E315/456, f.43r.
7. BL Additional Ms. 18,826, f.45; SP 4/1; LP XX ii, 1067.
9. LP IV iii, 6542 (4).
Richard Fisher and his wife Elizabeth in survivorship in March 1486, during the minority of Edward, duke of Buckingham, so long as the manor remained in the king's hands.1 Anne Greenhill, widow of Andrew Greenhill, was granted a 21-years' lease of Beryhouse and Bery mill, with fields and pastures adjacent, in the lordship of Redmarley Dabitot, Worcestershire, in January 1536, at an annual rent of £4 and 12d. increase, on surrender of her husband's lease.2

Rewards to the yeomen also came from the nobility, usually for a particular service. On New Year's day 1525 the earl of Rutland rewarded the yeomen ushers of the king's Chamber with 3s. 4d., as well as giving 20s. to the pages of the king's Chamber and 3s. 4d. to the henchmen.3 The duke of Buckingham was notably generous in rewarding members of the Guard, although this fact was cited in evidence against him at the time of his downfall in 1521. The payment of 6s. 8d. which the duke made to John Haywood for bringing news from the earl of Surrey from Ireland in October 15204 was not excessive, but the £5 rewarded to Hugh ap Howell in January 1521, for presenting the duke with a New Year's gift from the king,5 perhaps does appear so. Nevertheless, the same sum was given to a servant of the queen at the time,6 and the rate of reward to servants conveying such gifts clearly differed in accordance with the status of the giver. The earl of Rutland's accounts show that the servants delivering New Year presents in 1525 from the earl and countess of Devon each received 6s. 8d.,7 whereas the servant who took the queen's gift to lady Rutland in 1537 was rewarded with 22s. 6d.8 Minor rewards of an informal nature show that members of the Guard performed a small service to aristocrats at court, no doubt because they happened to be available there. The accounts of Henry Courtenay, earl of Devon, include a payment of 4d. on 27 January 1519, 'to a yeoman of the Guard in the king's Chamber for keeping of gages when my lord played at shuffle a board'.9

The Guard's complement

The foundation of the Guard in 1485 marked part of the changes which took place in the royal household following Henry VII's accession. In the absence of any firm evidence it is not possible to state the initial size of the corps with certainty, but the likely complement may be

1. CPR Henry VII, i, p.81.
2. LP X, 226 (37).
4. LP III i, 1285/4.
5. Ibid.
6. Ibid.
8. Ibid., p.281.
9. LP III i, 152, p.50.
assessed. One method of discovering the strength of the Guard at any time would be by referring to wages accounts, but these are not available early in the reign. Later accounts will be considered, after examining near-contemporary reports and exploring other methods.

Hall states that the number in Henry VII's Guard was greater than had previously been known to give daily attendance upon the monarch, but he does not say what the number was. Although Vergil gives a figure of about 200, and Bacon only 50, no formal information exists on the size of the Guard at its inception. From the sources already cited, the names of approximately 100 yeomen have been identified for the first year or two of Henry VII's reign. Presumably this would have been the minimum number in the earliest years, and it bears comparison with the Scots bodyguard of the French king, mentioned in the Introduction. During the 1470s, in addition to the captain and two men at arms, this bodyguard consisted of 25 archers of the body and 77 archers of the guard, a total of 105.

Later in Henry VII's reign, documents concerned with particular events provide an indication of the number of personnel in his Guard. A force of 200 is suggested by the king's stated intention to 'subdue in person' insurrections in the north of England in April 1489, when he ordered 200 pairs of brigandines (a form of body armour) for 'yeomen'. The author of 'An Italian Relation', in his report of 1498 for the Venetian envoy, Andrea Trevisan, commented of Henry VII that 'the military escort who compose his guard [and] are from 150 to 200 in number'. On the other hand, the Milanese envoy Raimondo de Soncino reported to the duke of Milan, Ludovico Sforza, in 1497 that Henry's bodyguard was supposed to number fewer than 100 'although he is now living in a forest district which is unfortified'. A force of 200 may have been considered the appropriate size for an escort where there was likely to be real danger. The earl of Northumberland, writing to the duke of Norfolk in 1529, stated that the wardens of the Northern Marches had always had 200 men about their own person as well as 300 in the garrison. When Henry VII met the archduke Philip of Austria during a month's visit to Calais in 1500, however, it is recorded that, in addition to lords, knights and gentlemen, 80 of the Guard were in attendance.

3. Bacon, p.35.
5. E404/80, m.68.
8. LP IV iii, 5920.
9. BL Harley Ms. 1757, f.361v; LP Richard III and Henry VII, i, p.91.
It is probable that normally a proportion of the corps would be on duty at any time, the whole force being commanded to attend only when required for special events. For important ceremonial occasions at home, for example, a much larger retinue was used. At the ceremonies marking the marriage of Prince Arthur with Katherine of Aragon in November 1501 the yeomen of the Guard were reported by a herald to number 300. This was also the total of the Guard recorded in the great procession which took place the day before Henry VIII's coronation. The only extant list of yeomen of the Guard for the whole of Henry VII's reign is in the lord chamberlain's records, showing in three different groups the names of those who were to receive livery of black cloth for the king's funeral on 11 May 1509. This contains a total of 193 names, some of which are known only by this source, shown in Appendix A.

The supply of apparel and equipment for the Guard also gives some indication of its likely size at the time. On 2 November 1501 the keeper of the Great Wardrobe was commanded by the king to deliver to John Fligh, yeoman of the Robes, 100 jackets of white and green cloth 'of the second sort' (that is not the best sort) for the yeomen of the Guard. Part of an account of John Heron, treasurer of the Chamber, dating from c.1505, shows that £200 was paid to John Vandelf for making 200 rich jackets for the king's Guard. In May 1495 the Exchequer officials were authorized by the king to pay to Sir Charles Somerset, captain of the Guard, £27.10s. to buy 110 sheaves of arrows for the Guard, at 5s. a sheaf, and £18. 6s.8d. for 110 bows, at 3s. 4d. each. In June 1496 John Young, the king's fletcher, delivered 100 sheaves of arrows for the use of the Guard, with cases and girdles.

The variation in the total wages recorded each month by the treasurer of the Chamber indicates that the number of yeomen in attendance fluctuated by ten or more in different months, assuming that all were paid at the normal rate of 12d. a day.

One of the reasons for the fluctuation in the numbers attending the king appears to have been absenteeism. Although permission was often given for the duties of certain local offices to be carried out by a deputy, service within the royal household was expected to be performed in person. The problem is indicated by an Act of Parliament of 1488, which stated

3. LC 2/1, fos. 122v-123r, 131r-131v, 134r; LP 1 i, 20.
4. E101/415/7, f.54.
5. E101/415/16, f.12v.
6. E404/81/1, m.19.
7. E404/81/3, m.16.
8. E404/82.
that yeomen and grooms of the king's Chamber were to give their attendance upon the king.\footnote{Rot. Parl., vi, p.418.} Absenteeism continued to be a recurring problem into the next reign, as will be shown in due course.

From the evidence contained in the various sources discussed, it therefore appears that the Guard's complement stood at a minimum of 100 in the earlier years of the reign of its founder. The number on duty clearly varied according to circumstances, and it is possible that an increase took place in 1495, at the time of the treason charges against the lord chamberlain and lord steward of the household. While the normal attendance on the king in his Chamber appears to have ranged from 50 to 70, the corps was readily available for special ceremonial occasions and in times of war, when it could be augmented as required. This was achieved, at least in part, by commanding the services of all of the yeomen of the crown, including those who did not attend regularly at court but nevertheless were engaged upon the king's business.

Reforms of 1490's to 1515

It has already been noted that the size of the Guard was not constant, and although the number of yeomen on duty fluctuated, little evidence is available to assess the changes in Henry VII's Guard. Possibly the household reforms of the 1490's affected the corps in some way not now discernible, apart from a slight increase in the number on duty. The surviving documentary evidence from 1493 regarding payment of the Guard's wages from the revenues of the port of Southampton seems to indicate that a change had recently taken place. While the Guard of 300 on the occasion of Prince Arthur's marriage in 1501\footnote{Ant. Rep., ii, p.258.} may seem an exaggeration, it does not appear so excessive when compared with the 100 persons attending the young duke of York at this event.\footnote{E101/415/7, f.74.} The figure of 300 is also recorded for the Guard on several occasions in Henry VIII's time, apart from the great procession which took place the day before his coronation in June 1509,\footnote{Great Chronicle, p.340.} already noted. These are contained in two reports made by diplomats in 1515,\footnote{Rawdon Brown, pp.78 and 85.} and in a description of the procession connected with the proceedings of the Order of the Garter in 1519.\footnote{CA Ms. N50, f.39v; Anstis, i, App. p.xii.} [See chapter 3.]

Undoubtedly the most dramatic rise in the size of the Guard took place in 1513, in readiness for Henry VIII's war with France. It is well documented that the king was... accompanied by his Guard, numbering 600, in the campaign during the summer of 1513. This will be fully discussed in chapter 4. As part of the drastic economy drive in the royal finances during 1515, however, 170 yeomen of the Chamber were discharged of their daily attendance on the king in June. They were granted 4d. a day for life, to be paid quarterly, and were to hold themselves available to serve the king whenever commanded. The first quarterly payment was made to them by the treasurer of the Chamber in September 1515.

It was probably at about this time that a deputy to the vice-chamberlain and captain of the Guard was introduced. Despite the formalization of the office of vice-chamberlain in the later years of Henry VII's reign there were occasions when both the lord chamberlain and his deputy were absent. This was the case when the festival of St. George was celebrated at Greenwich in April 1516. Sir John Peche was named as deputy to the vice-chamberlain in a herald's report of the event. Peche was also described as deputy captain of the Guard in a petition by one of the Guard which referred to the date of 1 May 1517, although the date of the document itself is illegible. A herald's detailed description of the ceremony to honour St. George and the noble Order of the Garter which took place in 1519 names Sir Robert Wingfield as the deputy to Sir Henry Marney, captain of the Guard. These instances are the only indication found for the early Tudor period of an additional officer in the Guard deputizing for the captain, but the position does not appear to have been formalized.

Reforms of 1519

When the garrison at Tournai was finally dismissed in 1519, following Henry VIII's agreement to hand back the city to French jurisdiction, the unknown number of the Guard still serving there had to return to England. Hall's account of this event shows that a similar arrangement was made for them as for those discharged in 1515:

In the end of March the king sent for all the yeomen of [the] Guard that were come from Tournai, and after many good words given to them, he granted to them 4d. the day without attendance, except they were specially commanded.

Some further expansion again took place in 1520, when 200 of the Guard were selected to accompany Henry VIII to the Field of Cloth of Gold, while it was planned to send 400 others to

1. SP 1/3, f.159; E101/62/11, m.1 (though numbered 4); BL Lansdowne Ms. 818, f.2v; BL Cotton Ms. Faustina E.VII.6; LP I ii, 2053.
2. BL Additional Ms. 21,481, f.191r; E36/215, f.192r (shows 171 yeomen, but the Additional Ms. shows the final digit crossed through).
3. CA Ms. N50, f.33r.
5. CA Ms. N50, f.39v.
7. Hall, p.598.
Ireland with the earl of Surrey. These events will be described in chapters 3 and 4 respectively. Following further military activity in France and Brittany in the early 1520s, a major attempt was made to reorganize the royal household and reduce expenses. This resulted in a completely new set of ordinances which were discussed with the king at Eltham palace during Christmas 1525, subsequently becoming known as the Eltham ordinances of 1526.1

Reforms of 1526

The Eltham ordinances were devised after a period of war and, as David Starkey has shown, they were the result both of Wolsey’s political manoeuvring and a genuine need to reduce the size of the royal household, which had become inefficient and unwieldy, partly due to previous piecemeal changes over a number of years.2 The ordinances stated that with the coming of peace it was possible to reorganize the royal household, which had been disrupted by the recent wars. Wolsey personally set out the regulations for the Privy Chamber, which he was anxious to keep under his own control, but the streamlining of the rest of the household was delegated to the comptroller, for the household generally, and the vice-chamberlain and captain of the Guard, for the outer Chamber.3 For the first time in a royal household ordinance, a substantial section was included on the regulations for the king’s Guard, which was the responsibility of the vice-chamberlain. This section, headed ‘Diminution and reformation of the Guard’,4 stated that, because of the late wars, the king had increased the number in his Guard ‘above that which was accustomed’, and as this number was no longer needed, a reduction was to be made to a certain level. The yeomen ushers were to be included in the total complement, and were to be chosen by the king. Although a space was left for the number at which the Guard was to be established, this was never filled in, and no indication was given of the number to be discharged. According to Hall 64 were discharged,5 while Holinshed gives the total as 84.6

The ordinances indicate that the lately inflated size of the Guard had caused problems in overcrowding in the king’s hall and in lodgings nearby. The situation had been worsened by the presence of servants of the yeomen, each of whom had one or two lads or simple servants in the court. Therefore it was stipulated that in future none of the Guard would be permitted to keep any servants in the court or to allow them to enter it. Penalties for disobeying this ruling would be, for the first offence the loss of three days' wages, for the second a week's wages, for the third a month's wages, and for the fourth loss of office. The yeomen remaining in the Guard were to continue to receive wages of 12d. a day, with any other allowances which they had at the time. As for those discharged, it was the king's pleasure that they should be made yeomen of the crown. In consideration of their service, a special arrangement was provided: those who held no office from the king to the value of 2d. a day would receive 6d. a day, and those who did hold offices worth 2d. a day would receive 4d. a day. Payment was to be made quarterly or half yearly by the treasurer of the king's Chamber and the discharged yeomen were given permission to return to their homes and to hold themselves ready to serve the king when commanded. It was expressly stated that these payments were personal to them, becoming extinct on their death. This statement was necessary because the normal practice on the death of a yeoman in receipt of the crown fee was to grant the fee to another yeoman. The discharged yeomen were therefore effectively pensioned off on half pay. This was similar to the arrangement made for former yeomen discharged of attendance in 1515 and 1519, all of whom, however, had been granted 4d. a day. At the end of 1545, 147 yeomen were still receiving their 4d. a day, and 40 were receiving 6d. a day.¹

1. Bodleian Ms. Laud Misc. 597.
4. Bodleian Ms. Laud Misc. 597; BL Cotton Ms. Vespasian C.XIV, fos.255r-256r; BL Harley Ms. 642, f.156; BL Harley Ms. 610, f.67; LS 13/278, p.178; LC 5/178, pp.11-12; E36/231; HO, pp.146-7.

Many questions are raised by the statements made in the Eltham ordinances relating to the total of personnel in the Guard. What was the established number intended to be? What was the 'accustomed number' referred to? How many were in office at the time the ordinances were drawn up? How many were discharged?

In view of the considerable fluctuations in the size of the Guard, it is difficult to conjecture what was the 'accustomed' number referred to and how far back in time one should go in order to determine this. It may be possible, however, to make an estimate from information contained in two documents of a later date. The first is a list of yeomen ushers, containing 23 names and shown as 'paid with the Guard'.² From the names on this list, it can be assigned to a date no later than 1523. Thomas Jackson had died by 10 August that year and Roger Becke had been appointed a sergeant at arms by 10 October. The importance of the list lies not only in the likely date but in the number of yeomen ushers, since this could give some guidance to the probable total in the Guard at the time. By referring to other lists of the Guard it is possible to see what proportion of the whole were yeomen ushers. Figures taken from official documents spanning fifty years, from 1496 to 1546, are shown in Table 5, p.41. Judging from

1. BL Additional Ms. 27,404, fos.26-32; LP XX ii, 1035.
2. LP IV i, 1939 (9).
Table 5: Numbers of yeomen ushers and yeomen of the Chamber, 1496-1546

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Yeomen ushers</th>
<th>Yeomen</th>
<th>Reference</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1496</td>
<td>8</td>
<td>67</td>
<td>E101/414/8, f.53</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1502</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>53</td>
<td>E101/415/7, f.152</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1503</td>
<td>14</td>
<td>72</td>
<td>LC 2/1, f.61</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1508</td>
<td>8</td>
<td>73</td>
<td>E101/416/7, unfol.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1509</td>
<td>10</td>
<td>83</td>
<td>E101/417/3, f.53</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1510</td>
<td>10</td>
<td>69</td>
<td>E101/417/3, f.57</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1512</td>
<td>9</td>
<td>75</td>
<td>E101/417/6, f.54</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1514</td>
<td>11</td>
<td>159</td>
<td>E101/418/5, f.27</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1546</td>
<td>16</td>
<td>112</td>
<td>E179/69/56</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

these, a total of 23 yeomen ushers indicates that the Guard must have been about 180 strong at the time of its reform in 1526.

The second document relating to the king's Guard which gives a clue to the 'accustomed' number is an undated manuscript of the lord chamberlain's office. This shows the cost of the wages of eight yeomen of the Guard increased above the number of 80, 'which be the whole ordinary by the king's book, every of them at £24 per annum', totalling £192. Clearly, this indicates that the Guard numbered 80 previously. Incidentally, the figure was misinterpreted as 24 in A Collection of Ordinances and Regulations of the Royal Household, where the total sum for wages is also erroneously given as £136. These errors are repeated in Letters and Papers. The wage of £24 per annum also contains a clue as to the likely date of the manuscript, since increases in household salaries and wages took place in Cromwell's reforms of 1540, when the Counting House again became the source of staff wages. The daily rate of 12d. previously paid would have equalled £18. 5s. per annum, assuming attendance on every day of the year.

The strength of the Guard is shown as 80 in two other manuscripts, both dating from c.1540, under the headings 'Paid in the exchequer and by the treasurer of the Chamber now charged in the household', and 'Wages now paid in the household which heretofore hath been paid in the receipt and by the hands of the treasurer of the king's chamber'. It is therefore certain that 80 was settled as the normal complement of the Guard at some point of time before 1540, and this is most likely to have been when the Guard was reformed in 1526. The increased complement of 88 referred to in the document mentioned above agrees closely with

1. LC 5/178, p.90.
2. HO, p.213.
3. LP XXI i, 969.
5. BL Cotton Ms. Vespasian C.XIV, f.276v.
6. BL Royal Ms. 7 CXVI, f.129r.
the 89 listed by William Dunche, a royal servant, in 1539/40, which includes the yeomen ushers but does not identify them.¹ From the evidence cited, then, it may be concluded that the ‘accustomed’ number referred to in the Eltham ordinances was 80, that the size of the Guard at the 1526 reduction was about 180, and that, since the figure of 80 was clearly adopted, about 100 must have been discharged of daily attendance. A force of 80 has a significance historically, as Henry VII was accompanied by 80 of the Guard when he visited France in 1500,² although this was unlikely to have been the whole corps.

As already stated, the discharged yeomen were to be paid at the rate of 6d. a day if they had no other office from the king, or at 4d. a day if they had offices worth 2d. a day or more. By consulting the royal accounts it is possible to calculate the approximate number receiving 6d. a day, as a group of yeomen paid at this rate appears for the first time in December 1528, when the first quarterly figures are available after 1526.³ The sum shown of £107. 6s. 6d. corresponds to a number of approximately 47 yeomen. A difficulty arises in the number of discharged yeomen receiving 4d. a day, as the figure for this group, £417.11s. 8d., indicates a total of approximately 273 yeomen.⁴ Payment at this rate was already being made to those dismissed in 1515⁵ and in 1519.⁶ From September 1518 to September 1519 the wages increased from £506. 7s. 8d. to £608.15s. 4d., indicating a rise in the number of yeomen from 331 to 397.⁷ Royal accounts for 1525 show a quarterly payment signifying about 316 yeomen,⁸ so it is impossible to be precise about the number in this category who were discharged in 1526. Since many of the Guard held one or more offices from the king, however, it may be assumed that these totalled at least as many as those who held none, so that the number of 47 may legitimately be doubled.

While those discharged from office no doubt felt aggrieved, retrenchment was not in itself an unusual occurrence, as has already been noted. The most radical change in the Eltham ordinances relating to the yeomen of the Guard affected those who remained. This was the regulation forbidding the yeomen to keep any servants in the court, or to allow them to enter it. Why should this be such a severe loss? An indication is given in the ordinances, where it is

² BL Harley Ms. 1757, f.361v; LP Richard III and Henry VII, i, p.91.
³ E101/420/11, f.11r.
⁴ Ibid., f.10r.
⁵ E36/215, f.203r. This figure represents 190 yeomen, although the accounts show that 170 were discharged - perhaps 20 were already receiving the fee.
⁶ E36/216, fos.20r, 31v, 40v, 53r, 64v.
⁷ Ibid.
⁸ BL Egerton Ms. 2604, f.5r.
stated that the yeomen 'be not able at their own charge to give sufficient and honest living' to their servants.¹ This suggests that the servants of the Guard were kept at court partly at the king’s expense. The Guard must have been by far the largest group of royal servants, and thus particularly vulnerable to reduction. There is evidence, for instance, that the Guard had an allocation of stabling for 120 horses and 60 beds for servants at about this time.² Although restrictions were also imposed on the numbers of servants that other officers were allowed to take into the court,³ members of the Guard appear to have been the only group to be totally denied the presence of any of their personal servants. Elsewhere in the ordinances reference is made to the ‘great confusion, annoyance, infection, trouble and dishonour that ensueth by the numbers as well of sickly, impotent, unable and unmeet persons as to rascals and vagabonds now spread, remaining and being in all the court, whereby also such noblemen and other of good behaviour as be allowed to have bouch of court be oftentimes disappointed of the same’.⁴

In the section on the Guard it is stated that their servants added to the annoyance, infection and confusion at court, and no doubt part of the annoyance was concerned with difficulties experienced over bouch of court. As the servants were no longer to be allowed at court, presumably the members of the Guard would have to allow them some recompense at their own cost, just as some yeomen had received board wages from the king when the corps became too large to be accommodated within the household. [See chapter 4.]

There was a further reason why the loss of the servants' presence at court was so keenly felt by the Guard. According to Hall, the king was sometimes served by the servants of the Guard rather than the yeomen themselves.⁵ The ordinances did in fact stipulate that all officers of the Chamber and household were to serve in person, and not by any substitute or other servants under them.⁶ As mentioned earlier, this was a recurring problem and service within the royal household was expected to be performed in person. Therefore, the yeomen of the Guard not only had to find subsistence for their servants in future, but had to attend at court in person, thus curtailing their activities on any private business in which they were involved. Naturally, their personal fortunes varied; and as they grew older and less active they would be more likely to be adversely affected by a drop in their anticipated income. The yeomen who held other offices which could be served by deputies presumably still received

¹. LC 5/178, pp.11-12; HO, p.147.
². BL Cotton Ms. Vespasian C.XIV, f.264r; BL Harley Ms. 610, f.56r; BL Harley Ms. 642, f.139r.
³. HO, pp.147-8.
⁴. LC 5/178, p.10.
⁵. Hall, p.707.
⁶. HO, pp.139 and 149.
income from these sources if they were unable to carry out the duties themselves. It was the yeomen without any other royal appointment who were the worst afflicted by their discharge from the Guard. Hall states that many of the Guard were far advanced in age, and that young men were put in the places of those discharged.\(^1\) This statement certainly indicates a radical change in the personnel of the Guard. Obviously, something had to be done about a bodyguard which was becoming old and feeble, and the general reorganization of the royal household presented a suitable occasion.

The Eltham ordinances also introduced a separation of the offices of vice-chamberlain and captain of the Guard. These appear separately in the list of officers who were to serve on a reconstituted council.\(^2\) In addition, the accounts of the treasurer of the Chamber for April 1529 indicate that bills for wages of Chamber personnel were signed by the vice-chamberlain and the captain of the Guard.\(^3\) Sir John Gage is shown as vice-chamberlain in the royal accounts of 1528-9,\(^4\) when Sir William Kingston was captain of the Guard. The two offices were again combined, however, when Sir Anthony Wingfield was appointed vice-chamberlain and captain of the Guard, by 12 March 1539.\(^5\)

Reforms of 1539/40

The provisions of the Eltham ordinances probably effected the most radical reform of the Guard since its foundation. The Cromwellian household reforms of 1539/40 increased wage rates generally and altered the source of wage payments, restoring to the cofferer of the household responsibility for paying household staff, as in previous reigns. From this time members of the Guard received £24 per annum. The Guard’s complement of 80, set at the time of the Eltham ordinances, was evidently found to be insufficient for the king’s needs since, as shown earlier, the 1540 reforms added a further eight members.\(^6\) But even this number did not endure for long. In 1544, probably due to the French campaign of that year, the Guard had increased to 130,\(^7\) and by July the number had reached 500.\(^8\) The subsidy list of 1546 for the royal household names 128 yeomen of the Guard, including 16 yeomen ushers.\(^9\)

2. HO, p.159.
4. E101/420/11, f.9r.
5. LP XIV i, 505.
Although Thomas Cromwell's reforms increased the Guard to 88, it was apparently sometimes difficult to find suitable recruits. In a letter to Cromwell of 31 March 1539, Sir Thomas Cheyne informed him that 'the muster of the three hundreds in the Downs was very unsatisfactory, both in number and in personages; not one man seemed meet to be of the King's Guard'.

Perhaps partly arising from this difficulty, Cromwell's reforms also instituted another body of royal servants. It was originally planned that this corps should consist of one hundred gentlemen of good birth, but the figure was subsequently halved to fifty. Possibly Henry VIII was planning to follow the example of Louis XI of France, who in 1474 had formed a company of one hundred gentlemen who were experienced soldiers, each with two archers, to share protective duties with his ancient Scots bodyguard. Unlike the case of the yeomen of the Guard, the foundation of the fifty gentlemen, later known as the spears or gentlemen at arms, is well documented. The reasons for instituting the new group of courtiers are indicated in a draft order which refers to absenteeism in the king's Chamber, resulting in an insufficient number to wait upon him, as well as the need for young gentlemen to be trained in the arts of combat. The draft document also states that, like the yeomen of the Guard, the gentlemen were to serve in the king's Chamber, but whereas the yeomen of the Guard bore halberds, the gentlemen were to bear bills or pole axes. It also specified that the gentlemen were to receive livery gowns of velvet for winter and satin or damask for summer. The ordinances for this new band of gentlemen at arms survive only in an Elizabethan copy, which is more specific about the place of duty of the gentlemen, indicating that they were to serve the queen in the Presence Chamber. No evidence has been found to indicate the effect on the Guard of the newly-created gentlemen at arms.

Later changes

Some changes of personnel in the Guard took place in 1545. New appointees recorded in the State Papers, with a wage of £24 per annum, were:

- Geoffrey Cawerden
- Roger Emerson
- William Courtney
- Thomas Edwardes
- John Baugh
- Geoffrey Keyting
- Richard ap Robert
- William Cartwright
- Davy Williams
- John Dewell
- Edward Lawes
- Oliver Tatam
- Francis Wilmott
- John Beswike
- Randall Rigges

1. LP XIV i, 633.
4. BL Harley Ms. 6807, f.25; LP XIII ii, 1111.
5. BL Harley Ms. 6142; Tighe thesis, p.4; Sandeman, p.9. See HO, p.276.
6. LP XX ii, 1067, citing SP 4/1.
Those who were to be discharged, with 6d. a day for life, were named as:—

David Phillips  John Belson  Thomas Gittons
Ralph Holford  William Oliver  Thomas Battersbie minor
John Hayman  William Gibbes  Robert Gibbes
John Tilcock  Christopher Chapman  Thomas Battersbie
Reynold Whitakers

John Belson was also to have the reversion of office as a yeoman waiter in the Tower.2

Only one yeoman, John Perpoint, was to be discharged with a rate of 4d. a day for life.3

The document in the State Papers detailing these changes can be used to date approximately the list of the Guard appearing in A Collection of Ordinances and Regulations of the Royal Household, where it is assigned to 1526,4 and to verify another in William Dunche’s account of royal household personnel, which is stated to be of 1539/40.5 Those newly appointed appear on the former list (with the exception of Richard ap Robert, John Dewell and Randall Rigges), while all of those listed above as discharged in 1545 (with the exception of John Hayman) are included on Dunche’s list. The former list therefore shows the Guard after the 1545 changes and the latter before they took place.

Officers of the Guard

Although the names of captains of the Guard are known, their precise dates of appointment have not been found, with one exception, as shown below.

Date appointed

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Date</th>
<th>Captain</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1 March 1486</td>
<td>Sir Charles Somerset (later Lord Herbert,</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>earl of Worcester)7</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>? 1508</td>
<td>Lord Darcy (to 11 May 1509)7</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12 May 1509</td>
<td>Sir Henry Marney (later Lord Marney)8</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>? 1523</td>
<td>Sir William Kingston9</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>By 12 March 1539</td>
<td>Sir Anthony Wingfield10</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

In addition, Sir Richard Jemingham was captain of the Guard at Tournai, from 1513 to 1519,11 when the garrison there was dismissed.

Since the captains were knights or peers, information about them is available in printed sources and it is not considered necessary to repeat this here. A few instances relating to their

1. Ibid.
2. Ibid.
3. Ibid.
4. HO, pp.170-1; this agrees with the manuscript LC 5/178, p.49.
6. Campbell, i, p.327, citing Lancaster Roll 98b.
7. E101/416/7; BL Harley Ms. 3504, f.254v; LP I i, 20, p.21; Leland, iv, p.304.
8. C66/611, m.33; C82/336; LP I i, 54 (9).
9. E101/420/11, f.135v;
10. LP XIV i, 505.
11. E36/236, pp.331-347; LP II ii, p.1514; LP II i, 1762.
activities with the Guard are relevant. Sir Charles Somerset’s role as captain of the Guard is shown in an Exchequer record of war payments covering Henry VII’s French campaign in the latter part of 1492. Further Exchequer accounts of May 1495 indicate that payments were made to Somerset as captain of the Guard for the supply of bows and arrows for the yeomen. Somerset is also mentioned as being present with the Guard at the creation of prince Henry as duke of York in 1494, and in 1501 he was commanded to see that the Guard was suitably arrayed and ranged for the official reception at court of Princess Katherine of Aragon.

It is not known when Lord Darcy became captain of the Guard. He is shown as holding the office in a warrant to the keeper of the Great Wardrobe dated 1 December 1508, ordering livery of cloth for ‘watching clothing’ for the personnel of the king’s Chamber. His appointment probably dated from about 30 May 1508, when Charles Somerset (by then Lord Herbert) became lord chamberlain. On 11 May 1509 Darcy headed the Guard for the last time, on the occasion of Henry VII’s funeral.

Sir Henry Marney was appointed to the posts of vice-chamberlain and captain of the Guard from 12 May 1509. His patent stated that he was to serve ‘in as ample a manner and form as the Lord Herbert or the Lord Darcy’, which indicates that his two predecessors also held both offices. Marney’s patent represents the first formal recognition of the office of vice-chamberlain. Wardrobe warrants of November 1509, December 1510, January 1512 and December 1514 for personnel of the king’s Chamber show his entitlement to livery of cloth as captain of the Guard. Marney served in the French campaign of 1513, when he had the misfortune to suffer a broken leg, caused by a kick from a horse as the troops were assembling. In 1521, accompanied by 100 of the Guard, Marney was responsible for arresting the duke of Buckingham, in the king’s name.

Sir William Kingston was appointed captain of the Guard following Marney’s death, which occurred on 24 May 1523. It is not known whether he was initially appointed vice-chamberlain as well, but the two posts were evidently separated by 1526. Nevertheless,
Kingston was described in Dunche's manuscript as vice-chamberlain and captain of the Guard.\textsuperscript{1} The accounts of Andrew Windsor, keeper of the Great Wardrobe, show that Kingston received livery of cloth as captain of the Guard in November 1524.\textsuperscript{2} On 17 March 1531 Kingston was paid his expenses of £41.10s.10d. incurred in travelling north with 24 of the Guard to attach cardinal Wolsey.\textsuperscript{3}

Sir Anthony Wingfield's appointment as vice-chamberlain and captain of the Guard had been made by 12 March 1539.\textsuperscript{4} On 24 July 1544 Wingfield was camped, with 500 of the Guard, at Causey Point, just outside Calais, in readiness to join the rest of the army with the king for the French campaign.\textsuperscript{5} During this campaign Sir Richard Southwell, vice-treasurer of the middle ward (the king's ward) was commanded to deliver sums of money to Wingfield as captain of the Guard, for wage payments.\textsuperscript{6}

One of the developments in the Guard during the later part of Henry VII's reign was the introduction of the office of clerk of the cheque to the Guard. The first reference to this office occurs at the beginning of the next reign, when the office-holder, Thomas Broke, sued for a pardon from Henry VIII.\textsuperscript{7} The role of this officer was to check those on duty each day, for appropriate payment of their wages, which he paid from cash received from the treasurer of the Chamber. He also made payments to various tradesmen supplying materials and other items for the Guard, as well as for transport of the Guard's jackets and equipment. Following Broke's promotion to sergeant at arms in May 1513,\textsuperscript{8} Lawrence Eglisfeld held the office. By a warrant of 24 June 1513 John Daunce was authorized to pay £2,000 from the war revenues to Eglisfeld, as clerk of the cheque to the Guard, for the Guard's wages.\textsuperscript{9} Eglisfeld continued in office until his death, which occurred between 7 July and 1 October 1531.\textsuperscript{10} He was followed by Griffith Rede,\textsuperscript{11} who was in office for less than two years, since he had died by 8 February 1533.\textsuperscript{12} Possibly Rede had been in poor health, since a few months before his death he had signified his willingness to vacate the office in favour of Robert Delwood, or Woode. One Robert Norwych wrote to Thomas Cromwell on 13 October 1532 in support of 'my brother...

\begin{enumerate}
\item Dunche (2), p.147; LP XII ii, 1060, citing Heralds' College Ms. I, 11, f.37.
\item E36/224, p.55; LP IV i, 1673.
\item E101/420/11, f.135\textsuperscript{g}; PPE Henry VIII, p.115.
\item LP XIV i, 505 (and see 479).
\item BL Cotton Ms. Caligula E.IV, f.57; LP XIX ii, 424.
\item BL Additional Ms. 5753, f.141r; LP XIX ii, 524, I (4).
\item LP I i, 438 (1), m.12.
\item LP I, 4047.
\item E36/61 (30); LP I ii, 2023.
\item PROB 11/24 (8 Thower).
\item LP V, 1419.
\item LP VI, 196 (16).
\end{enumerate}
Woode’ for the office, if it should please the king.¹ Cromwell’s ‘Remembrances’ of November 1532 include the cryptic note ‘Robert Dell Woode and Griffith Reede’.² In October 1533 Delwood was described as clerk of the cheque of the king’s Guard when granted the crown fee of 6d. a day for life.³ Robert Delwood held the office until his death, which had occurred by June 1540.⁴ On 27 October 1540 John Piers was described as clerk of the cheque to the Guard in the patent granting him the fee of the crown vice Robert Delwood, deceased.⁵ Piers remained in office until his death about nineteen years later, in the reign of Elizabeth I.⁶

One more officer should be mentioned in this category. Barnard Grete was described as ‘late clerk of the cheque at Tournai’ in a grant of 12 August 1520.⁷

Conclusion

Although developments within the Guard during Henry VII’s time are somewhat difficult to assess, there is enough evidence to show that its complement fluctuated according to the king’s requirements at any one time. This trend continued more markedly in the next reign, during which more detailed records appear to have been kept. These records indicate the active role played by the yeomen, and by the clerk of the cheque as the Guard’s financial officer, which will be discussed in the next chapter.

1. LP V, 1419.
2. LP V, 1548, citing BL Cotton Ms. Titus B.I.429.
3. LP VI, 1383 (5).
4. LP XVI, 220 (37).
5. Ibid.
7. LP III i, 967 (12).
Chapter 3
Functions and Livery of the Guard

After a brief introduction indicating certain conditions relating to service in the royal household, this chapter discusses the various roles of the Guard, starting with the ways in which the yeomen protected the royal family. General duties within the court are then examined, followed by examples of the varied tasks performed by the yeomen when sent out of court on the king's business. The Guard's involvement with personal events in the lives of members of the royal family is then considered, and a section follows on a number of specific offices held by some of the yeomen. The accoutrements and clothing of the Guard are next described, since they are relevant to the concluding part of the chapter, which gives an account of the Guard's role in ceremonial events.

Conditions of service

Since the yeomen of the Guard were servants of the royal household, they were required to take an oath of allegiance to the king upon their appointment. A form of oath used for the Chamber staff generally is included in some of the household ordinances,¹ of which an example is given at Appendix C. When two brothers, John and Bartholomew Flamank, were nominated for the next vacancies in the Guard in September 1511, the captain of the Guard was commanded to give them immediately their oath as servants to the king.²

It is possible that the yeomen served at court for specific terms of duty, at least in theory. The Tudor household ordinances indicate that some royal servants attended quarterly while others served on a daily basis.³ David Starkey has drawn attention to an order of April 1532 which divided the gentlemen of the Privy Chamber into two shifts each of six weeks, but which did not endure for long, since it was found to be impracticable.⁴ It is clear from Tudor records that some of the yeomen attended the king more frequently than others, and this is probably true for most of the varied groups of royal servants attached to the Chamber. William Rolte, one of the Guard, was appointed to the next vacancy as a sergeant at arms to Henry VIII in November 1511, 'in consideration of the daily service done unto us', and which office he had already exercised by the king's commandment.⁵

1. BL Harley Ms. 4107, fos.132v and 133r; BL Additional Ms. 21,116, fos.2 and 6v.
2. E101/417/7, m.136.
3. BL Additional Ms. 21,116, f.5r; BL Additional Ms. 34,319, f.3r; CA Ms. Arundel XVII/2, f.3r.
5. E101/417/7, m.128. have attended the king frequently in the previous reign. In March of an unspecified year, possibly 1494, Henry VII commanded the officers of the Exchequer to pay without delay Walker’s crown fee, which was half a year in arrears, ‘considering his costs and charges sustained in giving attendance about our person’.

Duties at court

The chief function of the Guard was the protection of the king, his family and his property. One of Henry VII’s heralds described the Guard as ‘evermore standing by the ways and passages upon a row in both the sides where the king’s highness should from chamber to chamber or from one place to another at his goodly pleasure be removed’. The same herald, reporting on the pageants which took place to mark Katherine of Aragon’s reception into London in 1501, related that the sixth pageant was witnessed by the king with Prince Arthur and some nobles, watching from a merchant’s chamber, and by the queen with other members of the royal family in another chamber nearby, while ‘above, in windows, leads, gutters and battlements stood many of the yeomen of the Guard’. The protective role of the yeomen of the Guard included keeping order around the king’s person as two incidents early in Henry VIII’s reign well illustrate. First, at the tournament which followed the coronation in June 1509, the Guard was used to separate some of the eager contestants who had evidently become unruly. Secondly, during the celebrations following the birth of Prince Henry early in 1511, the king had allowed some ladies and ambassadors present to take the gold letters from garments worn by himself and his companions, as a token of liberality. On seeing this, some of the onlookers, described by Hall as ‘the common people’, proceeded to divest the king and his companions of some garments, when ‘the king’s Guard came suddenly and put the people back, or else as it was supposed more inconvenience had ensued’.

While the Guard was concerned particularly with security and control, other duties were allotted to the yeomen. As mentioned very briefly in chapter 2, the household ordinances of Henry VIII’s reign incorporated portions of those evidently from Henry VII’s time. One section in particular, headed ‘The room and service belonging to yeomen of the crown of the Guard and of the king’s chamber to do’, sets out the household duties of the three groups of

1. E404/81/3.
3. Ibid., p.277.
6. CA Ms. Arundel XVII/2, fos.13v-15v; BL Additional Ms. 34,319, fos.13v-15r. See also BL Additional Ms. 21,116, fos.12r-13r; CA Ms. M.8, fos.14r-16r; and RS Ms. 61, fos.11v-13v.
yeomen. It is clear that these duties overlapped to a considerable extent. The ordinances indicate that the yeomen bore torches when conveying the king to and from chapel; set up and took down the king’s board (or table) in the Great Chamber; warned the relevant catering officers to prepare for the king’s meals and waited on the sewer to bring in the king’s meat; and gave water to the lord chamberlain, gentlemen ushers, chaplains, and knights and squires for the body to wash their hands.1 Another duty of the yeomen was to assist in making the king’s bed, in a manner fully described in the household ordinances.2 At dinner and supper time a yeoman usher was required to pass up and down the Chamber to ensure good service and order.3 Towards the close of each day a yeoman usher assisted a gentleman usher in the ritual known as All Night. This consisted of collecting various items of food and drink for the king which were delivered to the charge of the esquire for the body on duty in the Presence Chamber. The esquire for the body, who was responsible for taking a wax mortar to the king’s bedchamber and for locking the doors, collected from the yeoman usher the roll of the watch for that night.4 It is evident that some of these duties were modified over a period of time. The 1521 ordinances show two sections describing how the king’s bed should be made, one of which is referred to as ‘the old order’, with the proviso that it should be followed only if specially commanded by the monarch. This was an ancient ritual which included the direction that a yeoman with a dagger was to search the straw ‘that there be no untruth therein’, before the canvas and feather bed were laid upon the bed. The newer version omits this item, stating that a yeoman of the crown or Chamber was to ‘leap upon the bed and roll up and down’, smoothing the feather bed.5 Both versions, however, set out precise instructions for the way the sheets, pillows and covers were to be placed upon the bed. It is unlikely that even the revised proceedings were used after the reforms of 1518-19 and especially after 1526, when entry to the privy lodgings had become much more restricted.6 Another modification may be seen in setting up and taking down the king’s board for meals. The ordinances of 1493 specify

1. BL Additional Ms. 21,116, f.12; BL Additional Ms. 34,319, f.14v.
2. BL Harley Ms. 642, f.216r; BL Harley Ms. 4107, f.106; BL Additional Ms. 21,116, f.20; RS Ms. 61, fos.25v-26r; HO, pp.121-2.
3. BL Additional Ms. 34,319, f.10v; HO, p.153.
4. Hennell, p.150; see also Myers, p.119, and BL Harley Ms. 4107, f.102r.
5. BL Additional Ms. 21,116, fos.16r and 20v; BL Additional Ms. 34,319, f.19r; BL Harley Ms. 2210, f.20v; RS Ms. 61, f.17.
that the board should be set up by two yeomen of the crown and taken down by two esquires, while the 1521 ordinances show that two yeomen of the Chamber were to perform both tasks.

The yeomen were also involved in controlling entry to the king's Great Chamber, and kept watch throughout the night, when they were required to 'search the king's chambers and all the king's place well and truly' every quarter of the night, for any dangers or mishaps such as fire, affrays, treasons, or noise which might disturb the king. According to the household ordinances of 1493 and 1521, yeomen of the crown and yeomen of the Chamber were to sit outside the Chamber door when not actually serving within the Chamber. A gentleman usher controlled entry to any chamber where the king happened to be, with the exception of his Privy Chamber. When the king was in his Council Chamber, the gentleman usher was either to guard the door on the outside or hand over the duty to one of the lowliest in the council; and when the king was in his Secret or Privy Chamber the keeping of the door was to be transferred 'to such a one as ... should best content the king's mind and is accustomed thereunto'. The ordinances of 1521 state that 'there ought to be waiting at all times at the king's Chamber door without or nigh thereunto where he is present a yeoman usher'. These regulations are similar to those shown in Edward IV's household ordinances dating from about 1471, where it is stated that a gentleman usher was to keep the door of the chamber where the king was present, while a yeoman usher was to be posted at the second chamber door, and a yeoman of the crown at the third chamber door, 'and there to come in yeomen of the crown yeomen of the chamber and other of the king's servants and such other as by him which keepeth the door shall be thought fit and convenient'.

The yeomen ushers and yeomen on duty were required to be within the Great Chamber by 8 a.m. at the latest, giving their continual attendance unless given permission to leave by the lord chamberlain or, in his absence, the vice-chamberlain. A yeoman usher took charge of the Chamber, discharging the watch and ordering those arriving for duty to give their attendance. He was not allowed to leave the Chamber door without first giving the charge of it to another yeoman usher. The yeomen ushers and yeomen were empowered to remove any person they deemed unsuitable to be in the king's Chamber, referring doubtful cases to the lord

1. BL Harley Ms. 642, f.210v; BL Harley Ms. 4107, f.109v.
2. BL Additional Ms. 21,116, f.12v.
3. BL Additional Ms. 34,319, fos.14v-15; BL Additional Ms. 21,116, fos.12r and 13r; see also BL Harley Ms. 2210, f.15r.
4. BL Harley Ms. 642, f.210r; BL Additional Ms. 21,116, f.23v; HO, p.113.
5. BL Harley Ms. 642, f.207r; BL Harley Ms. 4107, f.102r; BL Additional Ms. 21,116, f.4r; HO, p.109.
6. BL Additional Ms. 21,116, f.4v; see also BL Harley Ms. 2210, f.10r.
7. BL Additional Ms. 21,116, f.8r.
8. BL Harley Ms. 2210, f.5.
chamberlain or, in his absence, the vice-chamberlain. The yeomen therefore carried out the majority of their household duties in or around the Great Chamber. Nevertheless, in the words of Henry VII's herald quoted earlier, the yeomen of the Guard were positioned according to the king's movements 'from chamber to chamber or from one place to another'. In common with other staff of the Chamber, however, they were liable to perform any other service which the king required, either within the court or beyond it.

Although all members of the royal family had their own household staff, the yeomen were sometimes required to serve them temporarily. Two members of the Guard, William Studdon and Thomas Hill, were described as yeomen of the Chamber when they were appointed to wait upon 'the Princess of Castile', Henry VIII's younger sister Mary, in November 1509, and in December 1528 Nicholas Purfrey, described as late yeoman of the Guard, was giving his daily attendance upon 'the princess', the king's daughter Mary. When the king's elder sister Margaret, Queen of Scotland, was staying at the English court in 1517, four yeomen of the Guard (Hugh Parker, Roger Witton, Robert Wythes and Robert Whelouse) were appointed to attend her.

Together with other royal servants, members of the Guard were assigned special duties for a particular event. On the occasion of Prince Arthur's marriage in November 1501 a yeoman usher, Thomas Lovell, was made responsible for the ordering of trumpeters and minstrels at the marriage ceremony and at the wedding feast. At Anne Boleyn's coronation in 1533, John Bromefeld, Adam Holland, Lewis ap Watkin and Edmund Stoner were appointed to attend upon the queen, and Henry Birde was nominated to superintend the 'servitors from the dresser' attending the mayor of London in the Great Hall, Westminster.

Duties outside the court

When sent out of court on the king's business the yeomen were charged with a variety of tasks, the most common of which were transporting the king's correspondence or apprehending and guarding prisoners. Thomas Greenway received 16s. 8d. in September 1497, to cover his costs in 'riding for the ordnance', and in November 1506 William Standon was

---

1. BL Harley Ms. 642, f.210; BL Harley Ms. 4107, fos.109v, 117v-118v; BL Additional Ms. 21,116, fos.10r-13r; BL Harley Ms. 2210, fos.14v-15r; HO, pp.152-3.
4. E101/420/11, f.11r.
5. E36/215, f.259r.
7. LP VI, 562, p.246, citing BL Additional Ms. 21,116.
8. Ibid., p.249.
9. E101/414/6, f.88r.
paid 40s. for 'going about the king's business for his orchard at Oking'.\(^1\) In May 1497 John Amyas received 13s. 4d. for his costs incurred in riding to the lord steward,\(^2\) and in August of that year Richard Selman was reimbursed his expenses of 10s. for riding on the king's message.\(^3\) Robert Whelouse received 1s. 8d. in October 1520 for riding from Windsor to London with a letter to Robert Amadas.\(^4\) In May 1504 Henry Hopkins and Thomas Jenet were paid 6s. 8d. for 'riding to Reading for two prisoners',\(^5\) and in February 1514 Maurice Clonne and John Williams received a sum of 26s. 8d. for their costs lying in wait 'to take divers felons'.\(^6\) Sometimes the members of the Guard were assisted by others, presumably with special knowledge of a particular area, since the royal accounts for February 1513 record a payment of £3 to 'guides going with certain of the king's Guard to take certain thieves in divers parts'.\(^7\) In February 1541 John Piers, clerk of the cheque to the Guard, was sent with five others to Dover to apprehend one John Mason on his return from abroad, and to bring him before the council.\(^8\) In the following month two former Eton scholars named John Hoorde and Thomas Cheney, who had confessed to robberies at their old college, were committed to the clerk of the cheque.\(^9\) Again, comparisons may be seen with earlier yeomen of the crown, who had been used to make arrests. In 1468 Godfrey Greene mentioned in a letter to his master, Sir William Plumpton, that yeomen of the crown 'had ridden into divers counties to arrest men that be impeached';\(^10\) and Thomas Aldersey was one of the commissioners appointed to arrest Otewel Ratcliff in January 1478.\(^11\)

The Guard was also employed when persons of note were arrested. Sir Henry Marney, captain of the Guard, was accompanied by 100 of the yeomen when he arrested the duke of Buckingham in 1521,\(^12\) and in 1530 Sir William Kingston, captain of the Guard, was sent to the earl of Shrewsbury at Sheffield castle 'with divers of the king's Guard for the conveyance of the cardinal of York to the Tower of London'.\(^13\) According to George Cavendish, one of Wolsey's gentlemen ushers, there were 24 of the Guard present on this occasion, most of whom had

1. E36/214, f.54r.
2. E101/414/6, f.71v.
3. Ibid., f.83r.
4. E36/216, f.108r.
5. BL Additional Ms. 59,899, f.55r.
7. LP II ii, p.1459 (King's Book of Payments).
8. BL Arundel Ms. 97, f.173; LP XVI, 1489.
11. CPR Yorkist, p.79.
formerly served in the cardinal's own household. They were allegedly sent with Kingston to attend Wolsey, 'knowing best how to serve him'.

The protection of the king's property included guarding his money. One such occasion was in 1489, when a sergeant at arms, John Jackson, was appointed to take the sum of £7,000 to Lord Broke, captain general of the army in Brittany. John Amyas with eight other yeomen provided an escort when the money was transferred from Westminster to Dartmouth.

One of the more unusual duties carried out by the yeomen involved taking inventories for the king, possibly in connection with enquiries into religious foundations. In April 1529 Richard Forster and Reignold Whitacres were sent to Pilgrim's Hatch in Essex 'to take inventory by the king's commandment', and in November of the same year the master of Jesus College, Cambridge, wrote to inform Cromwell that on the 13th 'Mr. John Wellysbum, esquire for the Body, and Mr. Thomas Halle, of Ipswich, came as commissioners from the king, with six yeomen of the Guard and their servants, eighteen persons in all. They have taken an inventory of all the plate and stuff, and of the building materials, and have taken away with them 24 copes, four vestments, etc. ...' Apparently the commissioners stated that the king only wanted to see the items and, they supposed, would return them to the college.

Duties at royal events

Evidence of the Guard's presence is to be found on many occasions centring on the private lives of members of the royal family, some of which involved a certain amount of public display. These included christenings and weddings, as well as funerals. It is possible that the whole of the Guard, or a substantial part of it, performed a ceremonial role which is not mentioned in the surviving manuscripts because its presence was taken for granted. The facts that were recorded, however, show a closer, more personal, involvement. When Prince Arthur was christened in Winchester cathedral in September 1486, five yeomen of the Guard controlled access to the two entrances leading to the specially constructed stage erected there for the royal font. Princess Margaret was christened at Westminster on 30 November 1489, when 120 torches were borne before the chapel by knights, esquires and other gentlemen, and yeomen of the crown.
The yeomen of the Guard are mentioned several times in the herald's record of the celebrations following Prince Arthur's marriage, which continued for two weeks, in November 1501. After the king had heard mass and made an offering at St. Paul's church he was followed by Prince Arthur, the duke of Buckingham, the earls of Northumberland, Essex and Kent, other members of the nobility, and 'all the yeomen of his Guard, right well beseen'.1 A few days later jousts and tournaments were held at Westminster, where several strong stages were built for spectators, one for the king and his entourage, and another next to it for the mayor of London and other dignitaries, as well as some for the 'honest and common people' who were allowed to watch from a suitable distance. The stages must have been very large, since the herald who recorded the event states that there came to the king's stage three hundred people of the royal and noble families, together with lords, knights, squires, gentlemen and 'yeomen of his Guard to his noble estate and grace awaiting'.2 On the Friday night following, after an elaborate 'disguising' in Westminster Hall, there was a 'void in the manner of a banquet'. One hundred earls, barons and knights wearing gold collars and chains entered, divided into pairs, one of each pair bearing a spice plate and the other a cup. Yeomen of the Guard followed them with pots of wine to fill the cups, and the 'goodly multitude of estates and gentles' were served refreshments.3 At the conclusion of the festivities a week later, the king departed for Richmond, where he arrived late in the evening, having been conveyed from Mortlake by torchlight. The torches were borne by three hundred or more gentlemen and yeomen of his Guard.4 The next Saturday afternoon the yeomen were commanded to give a display of their archery skills, watched by the king and the Spanish visitors with him.5

When a member of the royal family died, the yeomen of the Guard were among the royal servants attending the funeral, together with the household servants of the deceased. On the occasion of Henry VII's funeral in May 1509, twelve members of the Guard were given the special duty of bearing the coffin of their founder from the west door of St. Paul's to the high altar6 and the next day carried it into Westminster abbey.7 As well as the king's servants, the funeral procession included aldermen, sheriffs, clerics, justices, lords, and the Mayor of London. Among those following the chariot carrying the late king's corpse were the duke of

2. Ibid., p.297.
3. Ibid., p.302.
4. Ibid., p.313.
5. Ibid.
7. Ibid., p.306.
Buckingham, five earls, knights of the Garter, nine henchmen and Sir Thomas Brandon, master of the horse, then Lord Darcy, captain of the Guard, 'with the Guard and many other gentlemen.' On such occasions, the yeomen of the Guard were usually on foot, holding their halberds reversed, that is upside down. At Jane Seymour's funeral in 1537, however, the yeomen were mounted, 'in their best order, three and three', led by their captain, Sir William Kingston. Henry VIII's burial took place in St. George's Chapel, Windsor, on 16 February 1547. The coffin was conveyed into the choir by sixteen yeomen of the Guard on 15 February and the same number lowered it into the vault the next day, beside the coffin of the king's third wife, Jane Seymour.

Special offices

Occasionally one of the yeomen received an appointment to an additional office within the royal household or closely allied with activities in the king's service. The most notable of these offices was that of clerk of the king's ships, which will be described more fully in chapter 4, together with other naval activities in which the yeomen were involved. This post was held successively by Robert Brickenden from 1495 to 1523, and by Thomas Jermyn, whose appointment dated from 3 April 1526. John West, yeoman of the crown, was master of the king's barge from July 1497 until 1501/2.

The diverse roles performed by certain individual yeomen show how royal servants were fully utilized in the functioning of the royal household. According to Edward IV's Black Book, it had been customary for certain offices in the royal household to be filled by yeomen of the crown. This applied particularly to the yeoman of the Wardrobe of Robes, yeoman of the Wardrobe of Beds, and the yeoman of the buckhounds, as well as to the offices of yeoman of the armoury and yeoman of the bows. With the development of the Guard changes were undoubtedly introduced since, except for the last named office, other royal servants tended to be appointed to these positions. From the beginning of Henry VII's reign, however, Peter or Piers Warton had held the offices of keeper of the Little Wardrobe in the Tower of London, and keeper of the gates and houses of the inner ward of Windsor castle. In August 1486 he was

5. LP IV i, p.954; LP Addenda I i, 68 (10); LP IV i, 546 (6).
6. E405/80, f.24v; E404/84.
8. E404/80, m.377; Campbell, ii, pp.74-5 and 192.
described as yeoman of the king's Beds.\textsuperscript{1} It seems unlikely that the later holders of the office, or that of yeoman of the king's Wardrobe of robes, would have served in the Guard. In July 1514 James ap Jenkin was granted, in survivorship with William Butler, a sergeant at arms, the keepership of the palace of Westminster, with tenements in Westminster palace called Paradise and Hell, together with other tenements, lands and houses.\textsuperscript{2} John Gilmin may have had some musical aptitude, since he was appointed marshal of the king's minstrels on 17 October 1514.\textsuperscript{3} In March 1530 Robert Kirk was granted the office, in survivorship with Humphrey Ferrar [undescribed], of clerk of the market in the king's household, with power to make enquiries concerning false weights and measures in England.\textsuperscript{4}

Livery

Before proceeding to discuss the ceremonial role of the Guard, its general appearance will be described, in relation to the accoutrements or weapons carried and the apparel worn on different occasions.

As indicated in chapter 1, the weapons supplied for the use of the Guard were principally bows and arrows and halberds, but javelins were also included, at least in Henry VIII's reign. It seems probable that the yeomen provided their own swords, since they are not mentioned in the royal accounts. Evidence that they were carried is contained in a sketch which appears in an illuminated treaty of 1527, between Henry VIII and Francis I of France.\textsuperscript{5} See Illustration 3, p.60. Two of the figures depicted appear to represent yeomen of the Guard, one holding a halberd and the other carrying a bow, while both bear swords. In earlier times, yeomen of the crown were evidently armed with swords, as Edward IV's Black Book stipulates that when on watch at night they were to be girded with their swords or other weapons.\textsuperscript{6} An account itemizing ordnance and artillery supplies received by John Dawtrey during the reigns of Henry VII and Henry VIII shows that 95 bows were delivered to Henry VII's yeomen of the Guard at an unspecified date,\textsuperscript{7} and various accounts record the delivery of arrows to the Guard. In June 1499 the king's fletcher, John Young, delivered to Sir Charles Somerset, captain of the Guard, 70 sheaves of arrows, with cases and girdles.\textsuperscript{8} One hundred and four leather cases for arrows, together with girdles, were ordered for the Guard from the king's fletcher, Walter Endiss, in

\begin{itemize}
\item \textsuperscript{1} Campbell, i, p.571.
\item \textsuperscript{2} LP I, 5211; LP I i, 3107 (3).
\item \textsuperscript{3} LP I, 5504; LP I ii, 3408 (17).
\item \textsuperscript{4} LP IV iii, 6301 (26).
\item \textsuperscript{5} E30/1114, p.1; LP IV ii, 3356/3.
\item \textsuperscript{6} Myers, p.117.
\item \textsuperscript{7} E36/3, f.7r.
\item \textsuperscript{8} E404/183.
\end{itemize}
Illustration 3. Earliest known representation of yeomen of the Guard
From an illuminated treaty of 1527 at the Public Record Office [PRO E30/1114].
July 1517, and 108 sheaves of arrows with cases and girdles were ordered from William Temple, the king's fletcher, in July 1519. Twelve halberds were supplied for the Guard in August 1518, and in April 1520 Sir William Skevington, master of the Ordnance, received a payment of £91. 6s. 8d. for gilt halberds and javelins for the Guard.

While no firm evidence has been found that the Guard was equipped with bucklers, it seems likely, at least in Henry VIII's time. The well-known picture at Hampton Court of the Embarkation at Dover for the Field of Cloth of Gold includes a yeoman of the Guard with a buckler over the hilt of his sword, and a page attending another member of the Guard is carrying a buckler. Although this pictorial representation cannot be regarded as firm evidence, it appears feasible that the sword-bearing Guard would be provided with bucklers. This view is reinforced by the fact that the queen's bodyguard carried bucklers on this celebrated occasion. Furthermore, in the late 1520s a Welsh buckler maker named Geoffrey Bromefeld provided Henry VIII with a buckler, and by 1531 he was receiving a wage of 2d. a day as the king's buckler maker. He was described as a yeoman of the Chamber in 1539 and a yeoman of the crown in 1539/40. It is probable that he was related to John Bromefeld, a yeoman of the Guard.

As far as armour is concerned, Henry VII employed at least three armourers as early as 1486 (Vincent Tentelere, Ralph de Pontieu and William Rabarough), and it would appear likely that they supplied armour for the Guard. The 200 pairs of brigandines which Henry VII ordered for 'yeomen' in April 1489 were presumably for the Guard. Early in Henry VIII's reign workshops were set up at Southwark and Greenwich, where armourers from Germany, Milan and Brussels were employed. The 'Almain' armourers were provided with a livery of red cloth. When discussions were taking place on the detailed arrangements for the Field of Cloth of Gold of 1520, Henry VIII was informed by Sir Richard Wingfield, the deputy at Calais, that the French king’s Guard ‘always ride in their brigandines’,\(^1\) in case he wished his Guard to follow suit. There is no evidence that Henry VIII chose to emulate the French fashion in this respect, but the observation made certainly suggests that body armour was provided for the English Guard.

The clothing of the Guard took three different forms, according to the occasion. First, for royal funerals all household staff were allocated a quantity of black cloth from the Great Wardrobe, the yeomen of the Guard receiving four yards each.\(^2\) Secondly, as part of the Chamber personnel, members of the Guard also carried out duties as yeomen of the Chamber. In this capacity they received an annual livery of cloth for their ‘watching clothing’, common to all Chamber staff, for their more routine duties on watch around the king’s Chamber at night. This was issued from the Great Wardrobe, usually shortly before Christmas, and consisted of five yards of material, described either as russet cloth or as tawny medley. Warrants of both Henry VII’s and Henry VIII’s time show that the material was to be ‘of as good assuete (suit or sort) as it hath been used and accustomed’.\(^3\) Although no details are available to show how the watching clothing was made up, it seems to have consisted of some type of gown and no doubt followed the fashions of the time. According to one authority russet cloth could be either a reddish brown or grey,\(^4\) and there is evidence that some of the gowns were of ‘crane colour’ in Henry VIII’s time.\(^5\) Significantly, the captain of the Guard was included in the livery of watching clothing, but naturally his material was of a superior quality. Whereas the yeomen’s material cost 4s. 0d. a yard, the captain received six yards of French tawny, at 13s. 4d. a yard, ‘with a fur of good black buge’,\(^6\) which was lamb skin with the wool dressed outwards.\(^7\)

The third form of clothing used for the Guard was the most important and significant. For their chief court duties the yeomen of the Guard were clad in the Tudor livery of white and green, which gave emphasis to their role as part of the king’s retinue within the royal affinity. This is not to say that they were the only royal servants to wear the king’s colours, since others included the clerk of the navy,\(^8\) the master of the barge and the bargemen,\(^9\) as well as some of

\(^{1}\) LP III i, 806.
\(^{2}\) LC 2/1, fos.61, 122v-123r, 131, 134r and 171r.
\(^{3}\) E101/415/7, f.152; E101/416/7; E101/417/3, f.33.
\(^{5}\) BL Egerton Ms. 3025, f.32v.
\(^{6}\) BL Egerton Ms. 3025, f.16v; E315/456, f.11v; LP XIV ii, 238. See also E101/417/3, f.33; E101/417/4, f.17v; E36/209, f.12r.
\(^{7}\) Planché, i, p.63.
\(^{8}\) BL Egerton Ms. 3025, fos.30v-31r.
\(^{9}\) E101/415/7, f.62.
the minstrels\(^1\) and footmen.\(^2\) Nevertheless, it is evident from the many references in royal records that the coats or jackets worn by the members of the Guard were particularly distinctive and costly. Details included in the accounts of the treasurer of the Chamber and in warrants from the king to the keeper of the Great Wardrobe indicate that the Guard wore two kinds of livery jackets: those described as ‘the rich jackets’ or ‘the best sort’ and others described as ‘of the second sort’. Most of these warrants, authorizing the supply of material to be delivered to the yeoman of the Robes, described it merely as ‘cloth’, but some were more specific. Others actually called for jackets, occasionally with some further description, but almost invariably the colours of white and green were mentioned.

The number of jackets ordered varied according to need at the time, whether for new recruits or to replace worn-out jackets, or as a new consignment for the whole corps, and could be anything from 20 to 200. In March 1497, 24 jackets of white and green were ordered for yeomen of the crown, with bases of white and green.\(^3\) The bases were shaped like a kind of short skirt tapering from the waist of the jacket.\(^4\) The material was not actually mentioned in this particular case, but a warrant of 2 June 1499 shows that 20 jackets were made for the king’s Guard, each being half of white woollen cloth and half of green woollen cloth, costing 3s. 4d. a yard. The jackets cost 16d. each to be made, and they were embellished with goldsmiths’ work and embroidery. The goldsmith John Vandelf was paid £6. 0s. 8d. and the embroiderer, William More, received £9.\(^5\) On 2 November 1501, one hundred jackets were ordered for the Guard, of white and green cloth with sleeves and bases, and were described as ‘of the second sort’.\(^6\) In February of an unspecified year, perhaps 1505, John Vandelf was paid £200 for making two hundred rich jackets for the king’s Guard.\(^7\) A further detail was included in a warrant of 28 October 1508, requesting rich jackets of white and green cloth for the Guard. The manuscript is faded where the number of jackets is given, but it was possibly 14. These were to have bases and demi sleeves, with a border of blue cloth of gold of tissue.\(^8\)

The only contemporary description of Henry VII’s Guard was written by a herald who was present at the ceremonies marking the marriage of Prince Arthur with Katherine of Aragon in November 1501. The yeomen of the Guard were clothed in ‘large jackets of damask,

1. E101/414/8, f.40; E101/415/7, f.110.
3. E101/414/8, f.28; Beard, p.94; Hennell, p.288.
4. Planche, i, pp.35 and 114.
5. E36/209, fos.23v and 28r.
6. E101/415/7, f.54.
8. E101/416/7, f.3.
white and green, goodly embroidered both on their breasts before and also on their backs behind, with round garlands of vine branches, beset before richly with spangles of silver and gilt, and in the middle a red rose, beaten with goldsmiths' work, with bright halberds in their hands. These jackets were probably similar to what was known as horsemen's coats of the time, closely fitting the body, with wide bases from the waist to the knees, and they were undoubtedly the rich jackets.

Except for the occasion of Henry VIII's coronation in June 1509, when all of his household servants were dressed in red or scarlet, the Guard continued to wear the Tudor colours into the next reign. A further detail is shown in some of the warrants early in the reign, where it is stated that the jackets were to be 'bordered and guarded' with crimson velvet or crimson cloth of gold of tissue. The style still included half sleeves and bases. Henry VIII spent vast sums of money on arraying his Guard. The royal accounts for March 1512 show that a total of £548.0s.11d. was paid for gilt and white spangles and embroidery for an unspecified number of jackets for the Guard, including silks, cloth of gold and tinsel satin. The 600 placards of green satin of Bruges supplied for the Guard in May 1514 were embellished with silks and gilt and white spangles, costing the sum of £1,083.11s. 5d. Placards, or stomachers, were the forerunners of waistcoats.

From this time some variations were made in the Guard's attire, at least for special events. At the time of Princess Mary's marriage with Louis XII of France in October 1514, the duke of Suffolk, Charles Brandon, was sent in embassy to the French king, attended by 18 yeomen of the Guard. Fifty-four yards of black velvet at 12s. 0d. a yard were supplied for their doublets, together with 18 yards of green satin of Bruges and 36 yards of white satin of Bruges at 2s. 4d. a yard, and 54 yards of white fustian at 9d. a yard. Their coats were of scarlet cloth costing 8s. 0d. a yard, of which 84 yards were used, and the coats were trimmed with 27 yards of black velvet. Eighteen caps were supplied by the king's capper, Bartholomew Wale, at 2s. 4d. each. Unfortunately, no information survives on the colour of these caps. In June 1515 green

3. LC 9/50, f. 219v; BL Harley Ms. 6079, f. 22r.
4. E101/417/3, f. 7; E101/417/6, fos. 47 and 80; LP I i, 1073 and 921.
5. LP II ii, p. 1455 (King's Book of Payments).
6. Ibid., p. 1464.
7. Planche, i, p. 401.
8. SP 1/230, f. 289r.
9. Ibid., f. 299.
10. Ibid., f. 289r.
11. Ibid., fos. 292r and 300r.
cloth was ordered for 132 coats for the Guard,\(^1\) and in July 1518 123 coats of green cloth and three of red cloth were embroidered for the Guard. Presumably the red coats were for yeomen ushers, or petty officers of the Guard. The embroidery on the green coats cost 6s. 8d. each, and that on the red coats cost 5s. 0d.\(^2\) It seems that Henry VIII was already contemplating changing the colour of the Guard’s livery coats by this time, since for the Garter ceremony in May 1519 the Guard wore rich coats of scarlet, set with spangles of silver and gilt.\(^3\) These were probably the spangles for which Robert Amadas, the king’s goldsmith, was paid £1,419.18s. 2d. two months previously.\(^4\)

It may be that King Henry was anticipating the great ceremonial event of 1520 known as the Field of Cloth of Gold. For this occasion each yeoman of the Guard had two coats: one was described as being of goldsmiths’ work, with the king’s cognizance, and a scarlet base guarded at its lower part by cloth of gold, and the other as red cloth with a rose and crown imperial, ‘after such form and manner as the riding coats be now’.\(^5\) These in fact would appear to have been the rich coats and the coats of the second sort, often referred to in the royal warrants and accounts. The well-known picture of the Field of Cloth of Gold which is at Hampton Court was painted by an unknown artist or artists at least twenty-five and perhaps fifty years later. Although it is of great interest it cannot be accepted as an entirely reliable record as far as details of colour are concerned. Apart from artists’ licence in these matters, some colours may have been altered in restoration work. It has often been noted that although the yeomen of the Guard are wearing identical jackets in this picture, the colour of their caps, hose and stockings varies. It does not seem plausible that this would have been the case. Official records of the event show that the Guard were to have doublets, hose and caps ‘of one suit’, presumably meaning identical.\(^6\) This evidence is reinforced by the survival of a more detailed account of Queen Katherine’s bodyguard on the same occasion. The materials supplied for her 55 yeomen consisted of:- white satin for the doublets, green velvet for the coats, crimson velvet for arrow girdles, white kersey for the hose, and Milan bonnets.\(^7\) Since all the members of the queen’s guard were dressed in identical colours it seems most unlikely that the king’s were clad in varying colours.

2. SP 1/232, f.79; LP Addenda I i, 214.
3. CA Ms. N50, f.39v; Anstis, i, App. p.xii.
4. LP III ii, p.1535 (King’s Book of Payments).
5. LP III i, 704 and 704/2.
6. Ibid.
7. LP III i, 852.
Slightly varying descriptions of the attire worn by the English king’s Guard are preserved in contemporary French records, most of which mention the colours of white and green. One report describes the jackets as white and green satin with a rich rose on the breast and back.\(^1\) Another states that the jackets were of white and green velvet, while the same source also describes jackets of red cloth with a rich rose on the breast and back.\(^2\) A letter sent from the court of France to the Magnifico Pietro Montemerlo, royal senator, stated that on 5 June when the English king and his court arrived at Guisnes the Guard wore doublets of green velvet and white satin, the breast of the doublets bearing the rose surmounted by a crown.\(^3\) Another report covering the English king’s arrival at the Field on 7 June described the Guard as clad in doublets of white and green velvet ‘in chequers’, with the royal badge of the rose embroidered on their breasts.\(^4\) Presumably these were jackets or tunics rather than doublets, and this may have been a question of translation, from Sanuto’s diaries. These variations may be due partly to what the writer observed and thought worthy to record, as well as to differences in attire worn for separate events. An English description of Cardinal Wolsey’s cavalcade on making initial contact with the French king before the celebrations began states that the fifty yeomen of the king’s Guard bringing up the rear were clad in red cloth jackets, with a gold rose before and behind.\(^5\)

It appears that the livery coats were officially changed to red cloth in June 1526. The king made an order that he had determined to give livery coats, as well to the Guard as to all other yeomen, grooms, pages and children of the Chamber, Household, Chapel and Stable. This order is somewhat unusual, since it was addressed to the two clerks of the Green Cloth and the clerk controller, rather than to the keeper of the Great Wardrobe.\(^6\) It was no doubt connected with the reorganization of the royal household which was taking place at the time arising from the Eltham ordinances, the details of which took several months to finalize. The sum of £56.18s. 8d. was paid to Lawrence Eglisfeld, yeoman usher of the Chamber and clerk of the cheque to the Guard, to buy 213½ yards of broad cloth of red colour for 60 yeomen of the Guard, at 5s. 4d. a yard. Various yeomen of the Chamber and Wardrobes were to receive red cloth worth 4s. 8d. a yard, while the 28 grooms and pages of the Chamber and Wardrobes were

\(^1\) Beard, p.97, citing La description et ordre du camp, 1520, p.4.
\(^2\) Ibid., pp 97 and 103, citing Lordonnance et ordre du tournoy, etc., Lordre de lentrevue, p.11.
\(^3\) R. L. Brown, ed., Calendar of State Papers and Manuscripts existing in the archives and collections of Venice 1520-1526, iii (1869) [hereafter Cal. State Papers, Venetian], 68.
\(^4\) Ibid., 50.
\(^5\) LP III i, 870.
\(^6\) BL Cotton Ms. Vespasian C.XIV, fos.269v-270v; LP IV iii, App. 63.
to have red cloth costing 4s. 0d. a yard.¹ A further detail of the decoration on the Guard’s jackets is indicated in an account of December 1528, when William Mortimer, the king’s embroiderer, was paid £18. 4s. 0d. for embroidering 62 coats of red cloth with the rose and the crown imperial.² This included five yards of crimson satin for the roses at 8s. 0d. a yard, and two yards of white satin of Bruges at 4s. a yard. These jackets were presumably of the second sort, since the roses were of satin rather than of goldsmiths’ work.

The only contemporary pictorial representation of yeomen of the Guard during the early Tudor period appears in an illuminated border in one of a series of documents forming the Treaty of Amiens, ratified in August 1527.³ This has already been mentioned on page 59 in connection with the accoutrements borne by the Guard. The two yeomen depicted are dressed in striped tunics or sleeveless jackets of white and green, with a broad gold band round the neck and a gold crowned rose on the breast. The doublets appear to have been originally white, but the paint has oxidized over the centuries, resulting in slight discoloration, giving a mauvish grey hue.⁴ One yeoman wears scarlet stockings and a gold coloured cap, the other white stockings and a black cap. This pictorial description of the yeomen is particularly valuable since it shows their apparel before the change to red livery took place, and accords with some of the reports quoted from 1520. Since the documents were prepared in France,⁵ it seems probable that the illustrator based his depiction of the English yeomen on information recorded in 1520.

The visual impact made by the Guard is evident from reports made by foreign diplomats following their visit to the English court. These show not only that the visitors were suitably impressed by the appearance of the Guard, but again that there were variations in the apparel worn. The Venetian ambassador, reporting on his visit to Richmond palace in 1515, includes a rare description of the Guard wearing body armour:-

‘... we were conducted to the presence, through sundry chambers all hung with most beautiful tapestry, figured in gold and silver and in silk, passing down the ranks of the bodyguard, which consists of 300 halberdiers in silver breast-plates and pikes in their hands; and, by God, they were all as big as giants, so that the display was very grand.’⁶

The more restrained report of the duke of Nagera’s visit to the English king in February 1544 described the progress of the duke’s party ‘through three halls hung with tapestry, in the

1. Ibid.
2. LP V, p.306 (Accounts of Treasurer of Chamber).

- 67 -
second of which stood on either side the king's bodyguard, dressed in red and holding halberds'.

Further descriptions of Henry VIII's Guard on special occasions have survived. The chronicler Edward Hall stated that when the Guard left Greenwich in 1513 to travel to France, all 600 were dressed in white gaberdines (a kind of cloak) and caps. French sources describing Henry VIII's triumphal entry into Tournai on 25th September 1513, following the surrender of the city, reported that the yeomen of the Guard wore tunics of white and green, with collars and cuffs of cloth of gold, and a red cross on the front and back. Unless the report was in error, this appears to have been a rare occasion when a cross was worn rather than a rose on the Guard's jackets, but of course the red cross of St. George was the usual emblem worn at the time by English soldiers, who were traditionally clothed in white.

Great care was taken in keeping the Guard's costly jackets in good order. John Piers and John Belson, yeomen of the Guard, were paid 6s. 0d. by the treasurer of the Chamber in February 1538, for themselves and four women 'to brush and air the rich coats' for two days. During Henry VIII's reign the royal accounts contain numerous references to the transportation and storage of these jackets, which were kept in large containers or chests known as standards. Usually two carts were needed to move them from place to place as required. Thomas Broke (clerk of the cheque to the Guard) was paid 9s. 6d. in September 1510 to cover the cost of transporting the jackets 57 miles from Salisbury to Romsey, then to Bishop's Waltham, Portchester, Agam, and Waltham. In April 1519 Lawrence Eglisfeld (then clerk of the cheque) received 3s. 8d. to pay for two carts to take the standards with the rich coats of the Guard from Greenwich to Richmond. In July 1520 Eglisfeld was reimbursed £6. 2s. Od. for transporting the coats from London to Calais and Guisnes and return. He had to wait until January 1521 for the 6s. 8d. in respect of the hire of accommodation to house the coats and the accoutrements of the Guard while in Calais.

The coats were stored in rented premises rather than in one of the palaces or standing wardrobes. In July 1516 John Champneys of Greenwich was paid for the rent of a room for the

1. LP XIX i, 296, p.189, citing BL Additional Ms. 8,219, f.130b.
2. Hall, p.539.
5. BL Arundel Ms. 97, f.1v; LP XIII ii, 1280.
8. E36/216, f.40v.
9. E36/216, fos.39r and 121r.
great standards and coats of the Guard, for seventeen weeks at 4d. a week, and 8d. for removing them into his house;¹ and in January 1517 Lawrence Eglisfeld was reimbursed for renting space in ‘Amadas’s house at Greenwich’ for fifteen weeks for the same purpose.² This was probably the house of John Amadas, a yeoman of the Guard, since a payment of 12s. 0d. was made to him in October 1517 for the hire of a house for the standards and coats for eighteen weeks.³ Later in the reign a quarterly rent was paid for storage of the standards with the rich jackets. In June 1538, for example, Robert Delwood, clerk of the cheque, received 6s. 8d. from the treasurer of the Chamber for renting accommodation in London for the standards with the rich coats of the Guard for one quarter.⁴ Similarly, for the Midsummer and Michaelmas quarters of 1542 John Piers, then clerk of the cheque, received payments of 6s. 8d. for renting a house for the same purpose.⁵

Ceremonial events

A particularly important event in the lives of kings and queens was their coronation, which was also a public spectacle. Although few details have been found for the Guard’s role at coronations, the corps appeared in the great procession which customarily took place on the eve of the ceremony. In June 1509 three hundred of the Guard were included in the procession, ‘wearing the old king’s livery’, the greater part of them carrying bows and arrows and the rest halberds and other weapons.⁶

Ceremonies connected with the creation of a prince or a royal duke were always important occasions, but the creation of Henry VII’s second son Henry as duke of York was of particular significance. This took place in the parliament chamber on 1 November 1494, the day after the prince had been dubbed a knight.⁷ The creation was a shrewd political move which served to emphasize the unity of York and Lancaster, while showing that the previous duke of York was dead and that Perkin Warbeck was an impostor.⁸ It is recorded that the procession which took place after the creation ceremony included Sir Charles Somerset with the Guard.⁹ Upon Prince Henry’s creation as Prince of Wales on 18 February 1504, a sum of 3s. 4d. was given to the yeomen of the Guard who ‘watched’, i.e. kept vigil.¹⁰ Sometimes

2. E36/215, f.247r; Ibid., p.1474.
3. Ibid., p.1476.
4. BL Arundel Ms. 97, f.20v; LP XIII ii, 1280.
5. BL Stowe Ms. 554, fos.17r and 34v.
7. BL Cotton Ms. Julius B.XII, f.91; LP Richard III and Henry VII, i, pp.391-3.
9. BL Cotton Ms. Julius B.XII, f.91; LP Richard III and Henry VII, i, p.393.
10. BL Additional Ms. 46,354, f.25v. I am grateful to Miss Frances Devereux for this reference.
individuals made payments to the members of the Guard who had performed a personal role at a ceremony. When Sir John Legh of Stockwell, Surrey, became a knight of the Bath on the occasion of Prince Arthur's marriage in November 1501, he paid 2s. 0d. to 'yeomen of the Guard that watched'.

As well as the more personal events relating to the royal family, there were various annual festivals and special ceremonies in which the king's Guard had a role. One of the annual events was a solemn feast held at Windsor at Whitsuntide 'to the honour of God, St. George and the noble Order of the Garter'. A detailed account of the proceedings has survived for 27 May 1519, with a description of the traditional procession. This records that Sir Henry Marney, captain of the Guard, was not in the accustomed place leading the Guard, because he was also a knight of the Garter and was with the other knights of the Order going before the king. His place at the head of the Guard, following the nine henchmen and the master of the horse who came immediately after the king, was therefore taken by Sir Robert Wingfield, described as deputy to Sir Henry Marney. After Wingfield there followed on horseback three hundred 'likely personages well beseen yeomen of the Guard [and] in rich coats of scarlet set with spangles of silver and gilt'. Lawrence Eglisfeld, clerk of the cheque to the Guard, came after them, also mounted.

The description of the 1519 Garter ceremony also includes the scene during the church service as well as at the feast following. The yeomen of the Guard were present within the church, positioned along both sides, during the procession which wound its way through the chancel, the north and south aisles and the choir, to the high altar. At the Garter feast the yeomen carried the dishes to the board, and 'none did service in carving, bearing of cups and sewing under the degree of a Gentleman, but the yeomen of the king's Guard'.

Another annual event was the celebration of Easter. Although no precise details have been found for the Guard's involvement, evidence of its presence is shown in the royal accounts. In Lady quarter 1530 John Gittons, yeoman of the Guard, received 13s. 4d. for hiring two carts from London to Windsor and back, with the rich coats of the Guard 'against the feast of Easter'; and in 1540 John Belson and Ralph Holford were reimbursed their costs of 14s. 8d.

1. BL Harley Ms. 41, f.17r.
2. CA Ms. N50, f.39v; Anstis, i, App. p.xii.
3. Ibid.
4. Ibid., p.xvii.
5. Ibid., p.xx.
for transporting the Guard’s coats between London and Hampton Court for ‘the time of Easter’.

Some of the king’s movements can be traced through the accounts of the treasurer of the Chamber, which show that the Guard accompanied the king upon his progresses. In July 1538, for instance, John Piers and John Belson, yeomen of the Guard, were paid for conveying 77 bows, 77 sheaves of arrows and three javelins from the Tower and from the king’s fletchers ‘for the yeomen of the Guard to ride with the king in his progress’. Similarly, John Belson and Ralph Holford were paid their costs of 3s. 0d. in 1539, for ‘going to the Tower of London to set out bows and javelins for the Guard to serve the king in his Grace’s progress’, and for a barge to convey the bows and javelins plus 77 sheaves of arrows from the Tower to the clerk of the cheque’s lodging at Strand bridge.

Since the Guard was founded partly to provide the king with a spectacular retinue as a means of enhancing the reputation of his court, it held a position near the sovereign at the formal reception of important visitors from overseas. When the emperor Charles V visited England in June 1522, he was accompanied into London by Henry VIII in a sumptuous manner. An elaborate tent of cloth of gold had been set up on the approaches to London, where the king and his guest had separate apartments to prepare themselves. Both were attired in identical coats of cloth of gold, embroidered with silver. In Hall’s words the heralds had appointed every man their room and they set out in order, ‘richly appareled in cloth of gold, tissue, silver, tinsel and velvet of all colours’, and ‘there lacked no massye chains nor curious collars’. Each Englishman was accompanied by a visitor, riding together and paired according to their rank. Following Henry VIII and the emperor were their henchmen, the king’s in coats of purple velvet and the emperor’s in coats of crimson velvet. Then came the captains of the Guards, followed by the emperor’s Guard on the right hand and the English Guard on the left hand. Unfortunately, the attire of the English Guard was not described on this occasion.

Elaborate arrangements were made to welcome Henry VIII’s fourth queen, Anne of Cleves, when she proceeded to Greenwich in January 1540. In the great procession which made its way through Greenwich park the Guard followed the king after the sergeants at arms, the master of the horse and the henchmen. This event marked the first appearance of the

1. BL Arundel Ms. 97, f.115v.
2. BL Arundel Ms. 97, f.27v.
3. Ibid., f.82v; LP XIII ii, 1280.
5. LP XV, 10.
newly-founded gentlemen at arms, who, together with other gentlemen and knights, lined the route through Greenwich park to the meeting place with the new queen. After the royal meeting, the captain of the Guard returned with the yeomen to Greenwich, to position the Guard at suitable places in the palace where they could ensure good order and keep out any persons who had no legitimate business there.\(^1\) The royal accounts show that John Belson and Ralph Holford, yeomen of the Guard, received their costs for selecting and sending 100 sheaves of arrows and 31 bows for the Guard from the Tower to the king’s fletcher’s house on London bridge, ‘against the meeting of the queen’s grace’, as well as going to Greenwich to collect 100 halberds.\(^2\)

During the embassy sent from France in 1518 great care was taken to pair off the officers involved from both countries according to their rank, and to ensure equal numbers. On 27 September when the earl of Surrey, as lord high admiral of England, received the ambassadors led by the admiral of France, 24 of the French king’s Guard accompanied 24 of the English Guard.\(^3\) In July 1546 members of the Guard were in attendance during the further visit of the admiral of France. A gentleman usher was appointed marshal of the admiral’s lodging, assisted by ten yeomen of the Guard, who were to have half a dozen horses with footcloths ready to bring the ambassador and his party from their boat to their lodgings. In addition, 81 members of the Guard extraordinary were in attendance from 6 July ‘during the continuance of the admiral here’, each receiving wages of 16d. (or 1s. 4d.) a day.\(^4\)

The Guard’s role was sometimes extended beyond the royal family and out of the court, notably for diplomatic occasions. Early in 1514, when the provost of Tournai travelled to England for a meeting with Henry VIII, he was accompanied by two yeomen of the Guard, Francis Graunt and Anthony Woodeshaw.\(^5\) As already mentioned, the duke of Suffolk was attended by 18 yeomen of the Guard when he was sent as ambassador to Louis XII of France in October 1514. At this time the marriage took place of Henry VIII’s sister, Princess Mary, with the French king, fulfilling one of the conditions of the peace treaty of July 1514, in the aftermath of the 1513 war.\(^6\) Sir Henry Guildford also went to Paris in October 1514, to attend the jousts following the coronation of the new French queen, when he was accompanied by

\(^1\) \textit{LP XIV ii, 572, p.200, citing Chronicle of Calais, p.167.}
\(^2\) \textit{BL Arundel Ms. 97, f.101v; LP XIV ii, 781.}
\(^3\) \textit{Hall, p.594.}
\(^4\) \textit{LP XXI i, 1384, citing Vesp. C.XIV, pt. 1, 67; 1424 and 1516.}
\(^5\) \textit{ES6/215, f.140v.}
\(^6\) \textit{SP 1/230, fos.292r, 299r, 299v, 300r; LP I ii, 3426.}
two sergeants at arms and twenty yeomen of the crown and king's Guard. On several occasions cardinal Wolsey's retinue included a number of the king's Guard when he went in embassy to the French king. These included the visit to Calais in July 1521, when Wolsey was sent with the earl of Worcester, lord chamberlain, and a total of 460 lords, knights and gentlemen, to entreat for peace between Francis I and the emperor Charles V. Another instance was during the first stage of the ceremonies at the Field of Cloth of Gold, when fifty of the king's Guard brought up the rear of the cardinal's procession upon his initial embassy to the French king at Ardres.

The Field of Cloth of Gold presented the occasion of the most costly and ostentatious spectacle of Henry VIII's reign. The main purpose of this celebrated event was to enable the kings of England and France to meet personally, which they had not done before, and to ratify the treaty of London, which had been concluded in October 1518. This treaty, principally between England and France but incorporating all the other European powers, was intended to ensure perpetual peace among those involved. The meeting, and its associated festivities extending over nearly two weeks, took place in a valley known as the golden dale, between Guisnes and Ardres, early in June 1520. The days were filled with a variety of activities, notably jousting, feasting and dancing, as well as serious negotiations, and the total number of participants from the English court has been estimated as at least 6,000. Sir Henry Marney, captain of the Guard, had been commanded to appoint 200 of the 'tallest and most elect persons' of the Guard to attend, and to see that 100 provided themselves with suitable horses.

Apart from its function of providing a magnificent retinue for Henry VIII, the Guard performed several other duties during the celebrations. There was great suspicion on both the French and English sides as to the other's intentions and each carried out an inspection to check whether the other was armed. It was found that, in accordance with the articles for the meeting, all were unarmed. Prior to the initial meeting of the kings, troops of each country were stationed in the fields around the appointed meeting place. Henry VIII commanded that his Guard be in the van, 'the breast of the battle'. When he finally departed from Guisnes for

2. Hall, p.625.
3. LP III i, 869.
4. European Court, p.76.
7. LP III i, 704.
8. Cal. of State Papers, Venetian, iii, 50.
9. Hall, p.608; Russell, pp. 95 and 101; see also Cal. of State Papers, Venetian, iii, p.21.
his first meeting with Francis I on 7 June, Henry VIII was accompanied by 60 noblemen and 60 of his Guard on horseback with javelins. These numbers matched those to be used by the French king. Similarly, twenty of the Guard and as many of the French king's Guard were posted at the entrances to the field where the two monarchs were to meet, ensuring admission only to those specially chosen to be present. Following the kings' meeting, tension eased and the celebrations began in earnest. One day when the windy weather prevented any jousting a wrestling contest was held. Some of the yeomen of the Guard took part, and excelled at the sport by casting two of the Bretons who were renowned for their wrestling skills. On another occasion twenty-four of the yeomen were commanded by Henry VIII to demonstrate their prowess in archery before the king of France.

Conclusion

Apart from the ceremonial role of the Guard, some similarities can be seen between the duties performed by the Guard and those carried out by yeomen of the Chamber and yeomen of the crown in previous reigns. The diverse functions of the yeomen of the Guard did not diminish their primary duty in protecting the monarch. Because they were a permanent force they were readily available whenever order was to be restored or excitable crowds controlled. Their presence at the arrest of great persons may be seen as a visible expression of the king's authority as well as providing security for their captain, who acted on that authority. Finally, the costly raiment which they wore gave additional lustre to the court and proclaimed the significance of their master as an important European ruler, whether he was personally present or represented by a high-ranking subject.

Chapter 4

The Guard’s Involvement in Naval and Military Activity

This chapter examines the ways in which the royal bodyguard was involved in naval and military activity during the reigns of Henry VII and Henry VIII. It starts with a summary of general methods of enlistment available to the crown, then discusses the Guard’s military obligations and responsibilities, followed by a section on the royal navy showing the offices filled by the yeomen during the two reigns. Ways in which the yeomen were involved in preparing for naval and military campaigns are then described. This is followed by a discussion on naval activity during Henry VII’s reign. At this time all of the yeomen cited were described as yeomen of the crown, and it has not been possible to verify that they also belonged to the Guard. This seems likely, however, in view of the number of Henry VIII’s seamen who can be positively identified as yeomen of the Guard. After a summary of the early Tudor rebellions, the military activities of the Guard under Henry VII are presented, together with details of the rewards and forfeitures which followed. The account of naval activity in Henry VIII’s time shows that from the early years of his reign yeomen of the Guard were closely involved with service at sea. Details of the yeomen’s roles in Henry VIII’s military campaigns are then shown. The account of garrison duties starts with a brief statement about the few yeomen of the Guard who are known to have served in the Calais garrison, but this section principally relates to the activities of the yeomen in the Tournai garrison of 1513-19. Finally, the yeomen’s loyalty to the king is considered.

While the topics of a standing army and methods of military recruitment are related to the subject of this chapter, they are mentioned only briefly, being beyond the scope of this work. For the same reason the laws of retaining are not discussed here.

Background to methods of enlistment to the royal army

Unlike France and Spain, England had no standing army in the early sixteenth century. Such a force had occasionally been contemplated but rejected on financial grounds, since the English crown could not afford the continuing costs involved. Its resources were already stretched by the commitment to maintain the garrisons protecting the English borders. In the 1470s Sir John Fortescue had indicated, in The Governance of England, that it would be unwise to impoverish the people by placing extra burdens upon them so that they could not afford to equip themselves to rebel, which had happened in France, for they might then also be unable to equip themselves to fight effectively for the king when he needed their assistance. Sir John's experience as a leading participant in the Wars of the Roses had convinced him of the benefit of traditional methods of raising an army in England. Apart from considerations of costs, it had been found politically preferable and simpler to adapt existing practices. While temporary armed service was generally accepted as customary, demands for unfamiliar service carried the risk of alienating the people. By the later years of his reign Henry VII introduced a method of establishing what amounted to a skeleton army, without cost to himself. A statute of 1504 included a proviso allowing the king to grant licences to certain peers and knights, authorizing them to retain a specified number of men by indenture or covenant, to serve the king at his pleasure. The licences themselves were to endure 'during the king's pleasure and no longer'. Since these contracts were for an indefinite term, had force in peace as well as war, and included service overseas, they resembled those made between Lord Hastings and his retainers, rather than conventional military indentures. The preamble to a placard apparently drafted between 1504 and 1509 stated that it was wise 'in time of peace to foresee the remedy against the dangers of war', and set out the king's intention, by the advice of his council, 'to provide a substantial and competent number of captains and able men ... to be in readiness to serve us at our pleasure when the case shall require ...'. During Henry VIII's time Thomas Cromwell is known to have drafted a proposal for a standing army, as part of his political programme, but this was not pursued.

The early Tudors therefore continued to rely on the recruitment of temporary forces for specific occasions, by two chief methods: first by the commissions of array or county levies, and secondly by military contracts or indentures. The forces raised by these methods were often supplemented by hiring mercenaries, and for overseas campaigns auxiliary troops supplied by a continental ally were also engaged. From the second quarter of the fourteenth century military recruitment in the form of the indentured retinue had become the basis of English armies taken overseas. The individual contracts made between the crown and its lieutenants or captains set out the number of men to be retained in each category according to the arms they were to bear, the duration of the service to be performed, rates of pay and other

2. Goodman, p.150.
3. Dunham, pp.90 and 96-7; E101/59/5.
5. Cruickshank, Invasion, p.169; Miller, p.158.
conditions. In his turn the captain indented with knights and men at arms to provide the types of fighting men required for his retinue, stipulating the terms of service in a similar form to his contract with the crown. After the company concerned had been mustered to the satisfaction of the king or his deputy, the captain received an advance of wages to pay his men.¹

For the war with France in 1492 Henry VII made contracts with men at arms and squires as well as peers and knights, the individual himself usually being named as one of the men at arms. John, Viscount Welles, contracted to supply three men at arms (including himself), each with their custrell and page, 20 demi lances, 15 archers on horseback, 45 archers on foot, and 20 halberdiers on foot.² Sir Charles Somerset, captain of the Guard, indented to supply one man at arms (himself) with custrell and page, six demi lances and six archers on horseback.³ A member of the Guard, Lewis ap Rice, indented with the king to supply one archer (himself) on horseback, eight archers on foot and six bills on foot ‘garnished as they ought to be’. This indenture is subscribed at the foot ‘By your diligent servant Lewis ap Rice one of your yeomen of the Crown’.⁴

The only permanent military forces were the garrison troops, who were scattered, however, in more than a hundred castles and fortresses, the largest contingents being at Berwick, Dover and Calais. Although the total number was probably between 2,000 and 3,000 men, these could hardly be used as a nucleus for an army, since they were always required where they were based.⁵ Apart from these troops the only other groups which could possibly form part of an armed force were the small band of spears, which existed between 1503-6 and in an expanded form between 1510-15, the fifty gentlemen at arms established from December 1539, and the yeomen of the Guard. The latter corps, in existence continually from 1485, contained the greatest number of permanent royal servants, although the gentlemen at arms could swell their number by the inclusion of their own attendants, having at least two each.

The Guard’s military obligations

The principal duty of the royal bodyguard was naturally to protect the person of the king. Wherever the sovereign went, his bodyguard was in attendance, forming part of his personal

². E101/72/3, m. 1072.
³. ibid., m.1076.
⁴. ibid., m.1081.
⁵. Cruickshank, Invasion, p.165.
retinue. In common with all servants of the royal household, members of the Guard were expected to be ready to provide military service whenever summoned. The obligation to join the royal army applied also to holders of leases, annuities or offices granted by the monarch, whether members of the royal household or not. Any who failed to appear without good reason when commanded to do so were liable to forfeit one or more of their royal grants. Earlier monarchs such as Richard II and Henry IV had frequently summoned their annuitants as well as their retainers to give armed service,¹ and from Edward IV's reign the military support of retainers was more specifically relied upon.² By Henry VII's time, therefore, the yeomen of the Guard, on all of these counts, had a strong obligation to accompany the sovereign in battle.

Special responsibilities

The yeomen's prime duty of personally protecting the sovereign was extended by appointing members of the bodyguard to offices concerned with security of varying kinds, not only within the court but throughout the realm. A basic element of security was the safe custody of weapons and ammunition, and several members of the Guard performed this function in permanent positions, some of which were in the Ordnance office. This office had evolved in the fifteenth century from the Privy Wardrobe of the Tower, and was headed by a master, assisted by a clerk and a yeoman.³ From 1494 the masters were always knights. A surveyor was added to the complement in 1537, and from 1544, when Sir Thomas Seymour became master, a lieutenant was appointed, taking over the former duties of the master.⁴

Members of the Guard who served in the Ordnance office included Henry Southworth, who was appointed on 3 March 1498 to the office of bowmaker and surveyor of the bowmakers and keeper and purveyor of bows in the Tower of London, in Ireland and elsewhere.⁵ Later, Henry Birde also held the office of yeoman of the bows,⁶ receiving money from the treasurer of the Chamber to pay bills for equipment. In December 1528, for instance, he received £21.11s. 4d. to pay William Pikeman and William Buckstede, the king's bowyers, for supplying bows, arrows, strings, forked heads and quivers for the use of the king and his

---

1. Given-Wilson, p.64.
2. Goodman, p.132.
4. Ibid., p.124.
5. CPR Henry VII, ii, p.132.
natural son, the duke of Richmond. Piers Mainwaring was clerk of the Ordnance in July 1503. He had instructions to call together all the gunners once a year to demonstrate their shooting skills to the master of the Ordnance and the chief gunner. From time to time the master, clerk, yeoman of the Ordnance and the chief gunner were to certify how many gunners were proficient and how many were not, so that the king did not waste his money in paying them and that he was 'not deceived in time of need'. An account of half year wages for officers of the Ordnance from July 1518 to Easter 1519 includes the names of four members, or former members, of the Guard, Simon Burton, John Amyas, Oliver Turner and Thomas Jackson, all described as yeomen of the crown, but no other role is indicated. The office of yeoman of the Ordnance was held at this time by Elis Hilton, a yeoman of the queen’s Chamber. No positive evidence has been found showing that a yeoman of the Guard held this particular office.

Apart from these central offices it is evident that various members of the Guard served a similar role in the localities. In July 1489 Hugh ap Rice was appointed keeper of the armoury within Warwick castle, and in June 1514 John Wortley received two consignments of sheaves of arrows at Pontefract castle, ‘for the king’s use’. In addition, by 1491 Robert Harrison, yeoman of the crown, had become supervisor of the works at Hartfield in Ashdown forest, Sussex, where William Neal, the king’s master gunfounder, had set up a base manufacturing ‘pellets of iron for our ordnance’.

As well as these specific offices, some of the yeomen held appointments which carried the right to raise local men for the royal army, and to lead them in battle. This was known as the manred and applied particularly to stewards of crown or ecclesiastical lands and to constables of castles. Often the stewardship of an area was bestowed upon the constable of a castle within the district. Among yeomen of the Guard holding these dual appointments early in Henry VII’s reign were Owen ap Griffith, steward and hayward of the lordship of Laughame, co. Carmarthen, South Wales, and constable of Laughame castle, and John Thomas, steward and

2. E404/84.
3. Ibid.
4. E36/1/1, p.100.
5. Ibid., p.93; LP I ii, 3613.
7. E101/55/6; LP I ii, 3613, V, p.1513.
8. E404/80, m.326; E405/78, f.39v; E404/81/1, m.108.
10. Campbell, i, p.46.
receiver of the lordship of Haye and Glynbough, and constable of Haye castle. In addition, a greater number of the yeomen held one of these two appointments. John Sandford received the stewardship of the town of Marton, Westmorland, in September 1514, and Robert Stoner was appointed steward of the lordships of Tredington, Pamington, Fiddington, Stoke Orchard, Kemerton and Northey, Gloucestershire, in May 1537. Yeomen serving as constable of a castle included Nicholas Owdeby, at Higham Ferrers, Northamptonshire, from 1485, and Peter Motton, appointed constable of Pembroke castle, South Wales, in March 1528. It appears that in Henry VIII’s reign stewards were more likely to be chosen from those former yeomen of the Guard who had become sergeants at arms. John ap Guilliam was appointed chief steward of the lordship of Fownhope, Herefordshire, in September 1516, Thomas Greenway held the office of steward of Cuddington, Buckinghamshire, by 1522, and David Cecil became steward of the lordship of Collyweston, Northamptonshire, in August 1523.

Despite intensive searches, only sparse evidence has been found regarding the number of men that individual yeomen were able to raise, presumably by virtue of the offices they held.
In 1490 Thomas Brereton was paid 14s. 0d. for the expenses of 25 soldiers travelling from various locations to London, to serve at sea in Lord Broke’s company, while John Brereton received £2.13s. 4d. for his costs involved in retaining an unspecified number of soldiers to serve the king in Brittany. In 1492 Lewis ap Rice supplied 14 men for the royal army. An Exchequer account detailing expenditure on the Cornish rebellion of 1497 shows a payment of £17. 16s. 6d. to Edward Griffith for fees and travel expenses, indicating responsibility for a substantial number of men. Another yeoman of the Guard shown in the same accounts, Hugh Richard, received £2. 12s. 8d. Thomas ap Guilliam was one of the gentlemen in Gloucestershire appointed to attend upon the king, with 100 men, at the time of the northern rebellion in 1536. The muster records for 1544 show that Edmund Stoner and Geoffrey Bromefeld were able to supply soldiers from the counties of Oxford and Denbigh respectively, but the numbers are not given.

1. C82/3, m.7; Campbell, i, p.79.
2. LP I, 5395; LP I ii, 3324 (9).
3. LP XII i, 1330 (32).
4. DL 41/839, f.95; DL 42/21, f.147; Somerville, i, p.591.
5. LP IV ii, 4124 (15).
6. LP II i, 2345; A. C. Chibnall, ed., The Certificate of Musters for Buckinghamshire of 1522, Bucks. Record Soc., 7 (1973), p.72; LP III ii, 3289 (18); O. Barron, ed., VCH Northampton Families, Genealogical Volume (1906), p.25.
7. E36/124, fos.48r and 46v.
8. E101/72/3, m.1081.
9. E36/126, pp.72 and 73.
10. LP XI, 580 (2).
General naval activities and offices held

Certain yeomen of the Guard were closely involved in naval activities, in times of peace as well as in war. In Henry VII’s time probably the most significant naval development was the establishment at Portsmouth by the 1490s of the first permanent royal dockyard with a dry dock.¹ Since Henry VII was more interested in trade than in warlike pursuits, the crown owned only five ships in 1509, while during Henry VIII’s reign 47 were actually built and 35 bought or taken as prizes.² Although additions were made to the Portsmouth dockyard by Henry VIII, most of his ship-building was concentrated in the Thames estuary, at Woolwich, Deptford and Erith.³ As a result of this great increase in naval activity, the Navy Board gradually developed as a bureaucratic body during Henry VIII’s reign.⁴

The only official directly concerned with naval administration, under the lord admiral, in Henry VII’s time, was the clerk or keeper of the king’s ships. On 19 May 1495 Robert Brickenden or Brigandyne, yeoman of the crown, was appointed keeper of the king’s ships and held the office until April 1523. He received 12d. a day for himself and 6d. a day for his clerk, plus 3s. for every day when riding in the course of his duties ‘for the purveyance of goods and necessaries for the said ships .. [or] .. for the taking and arresting of ships’.⁵ Brickenden’s involvement with ships first became evident in August 1488, when he was one of three commissioners appointed to impress caulkers for a ship to be ‘made anew’ in the Weald of Kent.⁶ Possibly Brickenden’s introduction to royal service came through Sir Richard Guildford, since both lived in Kent and both were concerned with ships. The Tellers’ Rolls for 1488 and 1489 include details of payments made to Guildford ‘by the hands of Robert Brickenden’.⁷ Guildford was not only a principal courtier, leader of the royal affinity in Kent,⁸ master of the horse, master of both the ordnance and the armoury, and a ship owner, but was appointed overseer and governor of the new ship under construction in Kent by April 1487, which was to be similar in design to the Columbe of France. This was the ship to be known later as the Regent.⁹

5. CPR Henry VII, ii, p.17.
7. E405/76, fos.4r and 5r; E405/78, fos.6v and 17r.
9. E404/79, m.176; C82/2, m.384; E404/79, mm.37, 187, 178 respectively; E405/78, f.4r. Oppenheim, Accounts, p.35; Campbell, ii, pp.136-7.
Brickenden was already a yeoman of the crown when he was granted an annuity for life of £10 on 15 November 1490. An account for war wages during 1492 described him as having been 'the king's shipwright', and shows that a sum of £241.13s. 4d. was paid to him for making a dock for the king's ships at Portsmouth, for building the Sovereign, and for work on another ship then being built. From 1496 Brickenden was on many commissions connected with naval matters, ranging from enlisting 'ropers' for making ropes and rigging to seizing ships and other vessels for the king's use. Other yeomen of the crown (among them William Barnefeld, Benedict Weaver, John Monkeley and John Whittington) also served with him on some of these commissions. On 28 July 1509 Brickenden received a new patent for his office. It is possible that he was responsible for the design as well as the construction of the great ship the Henry Grace à Dieu, which was built early in Henry VIII's reign.

As mentioned in chapter 3, Brickenden's successor in office was Thomas Jermyn, described as yeoman of the Guard and crown when appointed on 3 April 1526. Jermyn had been associated with naval payments at least since March 1516. In July 1524 he was described as keeper of the king's ships at Portsmouth, when granted an annuity of £5, 'in consideration of his services in the wars'.

Another yeoman of the crown closely involved in naval affairs was Thomas Spert, a merchant seaman who possessed at least two ships. By 1511 he had become master of the Mary Rose, and in the following year he was appointed master of the new foundation of Trinity House, as well as master of the Henry Grace à Dieu, the newest and largest of the king's ships. In January 1512 Spert was granted, during pleasure, 8d. a day from the petty customs of the port of London, and in November 1514 he was granted an annuity of £20, which appears to have been connected with pilotage. The previous recipient of this particular payment, John Woodlesse, was also a yeomen of the crown and a founder member of the new corporation of Trinity House. In July 1517 Spert was appointed by the lord high admiral, the earl of Surrey, to the office of ballaster of ships in the Thames, his appointment being confirmed by Surrey's successor, Henry, duke of Richmond, at the king’s instigation, in 1526.1 At an unknown date before Brickenden’s resignation in 1523, Spert was described as clerk of the king’s ships at Portsmouth, when he was given ‘the rule of all the foresaid ships, masters and mariners, with the advice of Brickenden’.2 Spert was granted the fee of the crown of 6d. a day in March 1524 and was knighted in 1529.3

Preparing for campaigns

Apart from the permanent posts already described, members of the bodyguard were required to take an active part in preparing for campaigns. In the months preceding naval or military action detailed arrangements had to be made, to muster men and to ensure that sufficient supplies of ships, horses, carts, food, drink and other necessities would be available. In February 1492, for instance, John French, yeoman of the crown, received £6.13s.4d. for his expenses in requisitioning ships for the king’s use from the counties of Essex, Norfolk, Suffolk and Lincolnshire.4 In the same month Richard Slythurst was one of the commissioners for the counties of Oxford and Berkshire charged with the responsibility of providing horses, as well as labourers and carters, for the transport of the king’s ordnance, in readiness for the campaign in France in the autumn of that year.5 Edmond Huntwade received a similar commission for the counties of Northampton and Rutland.6 In December 1496 David Cecil was on the commission to purvey grain in the county of Rutland for the army to be sent towards Scotland.7

In January 1497 Brickenden was commissioned to ‘inspect and seize all ships ... and other vessels’ found in any ports in Kent, Sussex, Southampton, Dorset and South Devon, and to recruit masters and crew, in order to convey the king’s troops towards Scotland. He was also commanded to certify the king and council of the number of such masters, mariners and boys.8 John Gildon, another yeoman of the crown, was on the similar commission for ports in Essex, Norfolk, Suffolk and Lincolnshire.9

To some extent examples can be found in earlier reigns where yeomen of the crown were among the royal servants performing similar functions. This applies to the office of clerk

1. LP II ii, 3459; LP IV i, 2287, and 1990 citing BL Cotton Ms. Otho E.IX.401; LP IV ii, 2450.
2. Oppenheim, History, p.84.
3. LP IV i, 213 (2); Harris, p.25.
5. CPR Henry VII, i, p.394.
6. Ibid.
7. CPR Henry VII, ii, p.92.
8. Ibid., p.91.
9. Ibid.
of the king's ships, to which a yeoman of the crown, Richard Clyvedon, had been appointed in 1442.\textsuperscript{1} John Davy of Fowey, yeoman of the crown to Edward IV and Richard III (and later to Henry VII), was captain of the royal ship the \textit{Carvel of Eu}. He was employed to guard the fishing fleet and, under Richard III, was active in the attack on Breton shipping, which appears to have involved him in some piracy on his own account.\textsuperscript{2}

Military training

Little is known about the military training received by individual members of the Guard, beyond the fact that they practised archery, at which many of them excelled. Although swords, pikes, bills and guns were in general use in England at the time, the long bow was still the principal infantry weapon. Stow recounts how gardens which had existed for 'time out of mind without Moore gate of London' were destroyed in 1499 to provide 'a plain field for archers to shoot in'.\textsuperscript{3} The possession of bows and arrows, prescribed by the Acts of the Maintenance of Archers to encourage the practising of archery, was regulated by the manorial courts as well as by commissions of muster.\textsuperscript{4}

There is evidence that from an early date the archers of the Guard were called upon to demonstrate their shooting skills. Henry VII commanded them to give such a demonstration to Spanish visitors in November 1501,\textsuperscript{5} and Henry VIII arranged a display by 24 of the Guard in the French king's presence during the festivities at the Field of Cloth of Gold in 1520.\textsuperscript{6} Rewards were paid to the yeomen for shooting by Henry VII in 1503\textsuperscript{7} and Henry VIII in 1531.\textsuperscript{8} The youthful Henry VIII took a personal interest in his Guard, and was present during a shooting contest at Windsor when 'Barlow of the Guard' won the best prize. This gave great pleasure to the king, who jested that he would call Barlow the duke of Shoreditch, 'as he did dwell there'.\textsuperscript{9} Evidently the monarch was a keen archer himself, and his strength in drawing the bow was mentioned by Hall\textsuperscript{10} and by a Venetian diplomat.\textsuperscript{11} John Taylor's Diary of 1513 relates that while at Calais in July, preparing for the French campaign of that year, Henry was visited by three ambassadors, who found that 'the king was practising archery in a garden

\textsuperscript{1} Oppenheim, \textit{Accounts}, p.xiv; Oppenheim, \textit{History}, p.24.
\textsuperscript{2} Horrox, p.244; Oppenheim, \textit{Accounts}, pp.28-9.
\textsuperscript{3} J. Stow, \textit{Annales, or a General Chronicle of England} (1632), p.480.
\textsuperscript{4} Goring thesis, p.35, citing 3 Henry VIII, c.3, 6 Henry VIII, c.2, 33 Henry VIII, c.9.
\textsuperscript{5} \textit{Ant. Rep.}, ii, p.313.
\textsuperscript{6} Russell, p.132.
\textsuperscript{7} BL Additional Ms. 59,899, f.38r.
\textsuperscript{8} \textit{PPE Henry VIII}, p.135.
\textsuperscript{9} Smith, p.8, citing Wood, \textit{The Bowman's Glory, or Archery Revived}; Pegge, \textit{Curialia}, I, iii, p.18, citing same source.
\textsuperscript{10} Hall, p.515.
\textsuperscript{11} Rawdon Brown, i, p.89. with the archers of his guard'.\textsuperscript{1} Since members of the Guard were specially noted for their skills they were sometimes called upon to give instruction to others. In the earl of Rutland's accounts for 9 August 1541 a payment is shown to 'Holland of the Guard teaching my lord's servant to shoot in the longbow'.\textsuperscript{2}

While archery was given the greatest prominence, wrestling was also practised by members of the Guard, who were successful in contests held for this sport. Richard Skopham, yeoman of the crown, evidently excelled in both skills, since by his will of 19 December 1501, he bequeathed to his son Edmond a silver goblet which he had won at shooting, and to his son Thomas a piece of silver which he had won at wrestling.\textsuperscript{3} As with their shooting prowess, members of the Guard were occasionally commanded to demonstrate their mastery of wrestling. A payment to the yeoman of the Robes, recorded in the expenses of the privy purse in October 1532, shows a sum of 44s. 8d. 'for doublets for the Guard to wrestle in before the king and the French king at Calais'.\textsuperscript{4}

It is likely that certain men were appointed to the Guard principally because of their experience in combat. Apart from individual skills, it was necessary to train men in the kind of groups or formations likely to be encountered on the battlefield. Military methods in England were not so insular as sometimes assumed, since many Englishmen had served in continental armies, and the scientific study of warfare was encouraged at the highest levels of English society.\textsuperscript{5} Nevertheless it was recognized that some English captains and men at arms were likely to be inexperienced in warfare. William Caxton recorded in the epilogue to his translation of Christine de Pisan's compilation \textit{Le Livre des Faits d'Armes et de Chevalerie}, the occasion on 23 January 1489 when Henry VII had asked him to produce the English translation, so that \begin{quote}

'every gentleman born to arms and all manner men of war, captains, soldiers, victuallers and all other should have knowledge how they ought to behave them in the feats of war and of battles'.\textsuperscript{6} \end{quote}

At a later date, during Elizabeth I's reign in 1562, a book was published as a guide to captains on the training and drilling of their men. This book was unique at the time, being of an entirely practical nature and devoid of the references to antiquity which characterized earlier well-known military manuals. The author was Henry Barrett, a yeoman of the Chamber who had formerly served in Queen Mary’s Guard. In his preface Barrett mentions the experience which he had gained while serving in European armies. It is possible that earlier yeomen of the Guard had seen similar service and had passed on their experience at first hand, but left no record behind.

Payments to the Guard on active service

When on active service members of the Guard usually received their normal rate of pay, but there were exceptions, notably in Henry VII’s war with France in the autumn of 1492 and in Ireland in 1520-22. Details of these are shown in appropriate places in the text. From March 1513, however, an additional payment of ‘board wages’ was introduced. This was when the increasing number in the Guard (at that time 300) in preparation for war had become too great for them to be accommodated at court. By May 1513 400 yeomen were receiving the allowance, usually at a daily rate of 2½d. or a weekly rate of 18d. The last recorded payment of this allowance in the royal accounts was in September 1514.

Naval activity under Henry VII

Although naval activity in Henry VII’s time was not so great as in his son’s reign, there were plenty of occasions when ships were required by the king, and these were requisitioned as needed. It is perhaps significant that several of the yeomen were ship owners, some being also masters or captains, and it is a matter for speculation whether they held their appointments because of this. At the start of Henry VII’s reign John Bingham was owner and master of a ship which was hired between September 1485 and Easter 1486, to transport the king’s commissioners. Bingham was a yeoman of the crown by 24 May 1486, when he was appointed to the office of customer at the ‘Lantern gate’ of Calais, which was the main entrance to the town, although he exercised this office mostly by deputy. In 1491 Thomas Furgon was owner and captain of the Gabriel of Fowey, which had 170 soldiers on board, and John Ismay, owner and master of the Anthony of Dartmouth, was commissioned to impress sailors and soldiers and purvey victuals for his ship, to sail with other ships ‘against the king’s enemies’.

2. E36/215, f.122v.
3. Ibid., fos.125r and 127r.
4. Ibid., fos.143v, 144v, 145, 153, 155v, 156r, 157r, 159r, 162v.
5. Ibid., f.166v.
6. Campbell, i, p.494.
8. E405/78, f.29.
Ismay received a similar commission in January 1497 in respect of the Gregory Ismay of Dartmouth, 'to be sent with armed power towards Scotland'.¹ Other yeomen who were also seamen included William Nasshe, who was rewarded with £20 in December 1493 'for the great costs and charges and for the safe keeping and guiding of our ship called the Bonaventure which he has in his rule and governance'.²

Early Tudor combats

There is little documentary evidence regarding the combats of Henry VII's reign, the principal surviving information being contained in the records of chroniclers. As C. G. Cruickshank has pointed out in connection with overseas campaigns, the paucity of documents is partly explained by the fact that 'when the army was commanded by the king in person, there was no need to send home frequent dispatches'.³ This applies equally to encounters within the kingdom which were commanded by the sovereign.

As already shown, many of the earliest yeomen of the Guard had served overseas with Henry Tudor when he was still the exiled earl of Richmond, and their appointment to the royal bodyguard followed soon after the victory at Bosworth. The first grants of office to them from Henry VII referred to their 'true and faithful service' overseas as well as at 'our late victorious journey'.⁴ Their presence at Bosworth field may therefore be seen as the first of their campaigns in support of the new monarch.

Several armed rebellions took place in the early years of Henry VII's reign, despite the decisive victory at Bosworth. What was the role of the bodyguard during these events? The first rebellion occurred after Easter 1486, while the king was on progress in the north of England. Rumours of the rebellion by Humphrey Stafford and Francis, Lord Lovell, were verified while the monarch was in York, where the citizens were known to have esteemed Richard III. Henry realised that it would be difficult to raise a reliable force from the area, and Polydore Vergil relates that, since it was essential to act swiftly, the monarch was obliged to engage his whole retinue against the rebels, including his bodyguard. Obviously the Guard on its own would have been an inadequate force against any organized army. Vergil states that Henry's supporters totalled 3,000 ill-equipped men, the majority of whom made armour for themselves from leather.⁵ After assembling this force, the king averted a dangerous situation

---

2. E404/81/3.
4. Campbell, i, pp. 53, 57, 66.
5. Vergil, p.11.
by the successful strategy of announcing that he would pardon all those who laid down their arms, and no conflict took place. Unfortunately, Vergil does not say how many of the Guard were with the king, but the number is not likely to have exceeded 200 men, and was probably only about 80.

The first military encounter of the reign after 1485 occurred at Stoke, Nottinghamshire, on 16 June 1487. This arose from a conspiracy against the king in support of the impostor Lambert Simnel, who had been crowned in Ireland by Yorkist followers as Edward VI. On this occasion a fierce battle did take place, but the king was not personally involved and watched the engagement of his vanguard from a safe distance. Although the Guard is not specifically mentioned in records of the encounter, a herald's report of the proceedings relates that after hearing mass in a village church on 14 June, Henry put his own retinue through its paces in preparation for battle.¹ This retinue would certainly have included his bodyguard, but again it is not possible to state the number of personnel involved. It also remains uncertain whether any members of the Guard actually took part in the battle.

Military activity under Henry VII

In 1489 Henry VII commanded all his true liegemen and subjects to repair to Sir Charles Somerset, who was appointed to take the musters in London for the army to be sent to Brittany.² Individual yeomen were appointed by the king to serve there. The actual number is unknown, but the names of eight of them are shown in the Exchequer accounts of 1488-9: William Slater, Hugh ap Richard, Henry Goodclerk, Robert Buckley, William Stedman, John Desmond, William Dodde and Richard Frere.³ The first two were not described, the next three being called yeomen of the crown and the last three yeomen of the Chamber.

The first occasion on which it is known that the royal bodyguard as a whole was actively involved in a military campaign was in the autumn of 1492, when Henry VII led his army in France, and laid siege to Boulogne. A surviving record of war payments, covering the period from 25 September 1492 to mid-January 1493, shows the number in the king's bodyguard, divided into categories.⁴ Under the captain, Sir Charles Somerset, the Guard consisted of

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Number</th>
<th>Description</th>
<th>Rate</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>8 demilances</td>
<td>@ 9d. a day</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>157 yeomen</td>
<td>@ 12d.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4 yeomen</td>
<td>@ 8d.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>101 archers</td>
<td>@ 6d.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

¹ M. Bennett, Lambert Simnel and the Battle of Stoke (Gloucester and New York, 1987), p.82.
³ E404/80, mm.119 and 165; E404/79, m.145.
⁴ E36/285, p.18.
totalling 270 in the first month. This number decreased to 265 in the following two months, reducing further to 150 in the month beginning on 18 December, when no demilances or archers were shown. The falling numbers may be accounted for by the fact that peace was concluded in November, resulting in the Treaty of Etaples, whereby it was agreed that peace would endure between the two countries for the lifetime of both monarchs. Members of the Guard also saw active service in the battle of Blackheath in 1497. This battle marked the culmination of the Cornish rising against the taxation levied for the war with Scotland.

Rewards and forfeitures

Following the conflict of 1497, several members of the Guard were rewarded for their service on the battlefield. Among these were John Holland, who on 3 August 1497 was appointed to the office of keeper of the little park of Denbigh, North Wales; Thomas Greenway, a yeoman usher of the Chamber, who received a grant of two tenements in the city of London on 15 August; and William Serche, who was appointed on 25 August as one of the keepers of Galtres forest, Yorkshire.

These examples show the particular importance attached to the readiness of royal servants to reaffirm their loyalty by attending the sovereign on the battlefield whenever the necessity arose. Those who omitted to do so were likely to be penalised by loss of favour and offices. The penalty of forfeiture of offices, annuities and fees was actually legalized by Parliament in 1495, and extended to include forfeiture of royal gifts of land by a further Act in 1504. In each of the grants of office mentioned above, the name of the previous holder is given, together with the statement that it was forfeited for absence from the king’s last campaign, or in one instance from ‘the last battle on Blackheath and from the king’s expedition to Boulogne’. The legislation enacted by Henry VII was in fact a codification of earlier practices. Henry V had declared a similar forfeiture for all men who were of his livery and retinue, as well as knights, esquires or valets holding fees, wages or annuities of the crown, whether granted by himself, Henry IV, Richard II or Edward III. On 8 May 1471 Edward IV had written to Henry Vernon, desiring and charging him to bring suitably arrayed supporters to resist rebels, on his allegiance ‘and forfeiture of all that thee may forfeit’. Similarly, in 1485

1. CPR Henry VII, ii, p.113.
2. Ibid., pp.113-114.
3. Ibid., pp.120-121.
5. CPR Henry VII, ii, p.113.
the commissioners of array in Yorkshire were instructed by Richard III to command that all knights, squires and gentlemen be prepared to serve him at an hour’s warning without fail, on peril of losing their lives, lands and goods.¹

Naval activity under Henry VIII

The events of Henry VIII’s reign are recorded in much greater detail than those of his father, and the Guard features in several records of the expeditions and campaigns of the time, at sea as well as on land. The young monarch took a particular interest in his navy, and in July/August 1512 he visited the fleet at Portsmouth, to see the ships which had been prepared for war, numbering about 25 at that time,² excluding the 26 Flemish hulks and the victuallers.
During this visit the king appointed captains for the principal ships, and 60 yeomen of the Guard were assigned to the Sovereign, which was under the joint captaincy of Sir Charles Brandon and Sir Henry Guildford.³ Several members of the Guard were appointed to serve as captains or petty captains. Among these were Robert Leighton, appointed petty captain of the Gabriel of Topsham,⁴ and William Keby, who became captain of the Swallow.⁵ Early in April 1512 Keby and Leighton had been commissioned to ‘muster the mariners in the ships and those coming to them from day to day, marking the days of their entering the ships’.⁶ An account of charges of the ‘army by sea’ for a month from March to April 1513 shows that 191 ‘soldiers of the Guard’ were on board the Great Nicholas, and from May to July of that year fifty yeomen of the Chamber served at sea with the lord admiral,⁷ when a further attack on the French fleet was planned.

One of the yeomen who was a ship owner in Henry VIII’s reign is shown in an undated document of 1512, where the king agreed to lend the sum of £40 for a stated time to William Sabyn, described as yeoman of the crown and owner of a ship called the Sabyn, ‘with the which ship he shall do unto us service upon the sea’⁸. Sabyn had been established as a trader in Ipswich before 1504, and became a very active and prominent captain, serving in his ship, which was included in the king’s ‘army royal by the sea’ in 1513 and 1514 as well as in 1512.⁹

---

¹. R. Horrox and P. W. Hammond, eds., British Library Harleian Manuscript 433, 4 vols. (Upminster and
². A. Spont, ed., Letters and Papers relating to the War with France 1512-1513, Navy Records Society, 10
(1897) [hereafter Spont], p.xxiv.
³. E36/3, f.7r; Hall, p.534.
⁵. LP I, 3591.
⁶. SP 1/229, f.46; LP I i, 1134.
⁷. BL Royal Ms. 14B xxv; LP I, 3980; E36/215, fos. 125v and 129v.
⁸. E101/417/7, m.108.
The sixty soldiers and forty mariners who served on the Sabyn in 1512 had been impressed by Sabyn from the area around Ipswich, principally from Bawdsey, Alderton and Sutton, and places in the Colne Valley. It was probably through his seafaring contacts with Edward Echyngham, an Ipswich associate of the Howards, that he came to the notice of the lord admiral, Sir Edward Howard, who recommended him to Wolsey, also from Ipswich. Howard sent Sabyn back to England with news for Henry VIII regarding the proposed attack on the French fleet in 1513, and subsequently mentioned his name in a letter to the king dated 17 April 1513, in which he assured the monarch that they would do everything possible, 'seeing that God hath sent us here in so great advantage of your enemies, as I am sure Sabyn hath informed your Grace'. Sabyn conveyed a royal letter back to Howard, and was evidently entrusted with advising the lord admiral on the action to take. Nevertheless Howard, to his own cost, failed to accept Sabyn's advice regarding an attack on the enemy. Sabyn, a very experienced seaman, evidently considered that the French fleet was too strong to be attacked from the sea, especially since galleys had been positioned across the entrance to Brest haven, where the French fleet was situated, but he considered that a land attack could have been effected. Following the action in which the lord admiral was killed, Sabyn reported to Wolsey on 30 April that he had offered his advice as Wolsey, his 'head and governor', had commanded, but a Spanish captain named Charran had persuaded Howard that there was no great danger in making a sea attack on the galleys in the haven. Further, Sabyn stated that the enterprise on the galleys was not conducted as he would have advised, and the admiral had attacked them before his arrival. Sabyn added that Howard had died like a valiant man.

Sabyn continued to be involved in warfare, at sea and on land, serving in the force led by the earl of Surrey to repel the invasion of the Scottish king, James IV, in the late summer of 1513, as well as a further mission along the French coast the following winter. In 1515 Sabyn, as captain of the Anne Galant and vice admiral, commanded a small fleet of royal ships sent to the coast of Scotland to lend support to the widowed Queen Margaret, elder sister of Henry VIII. Two years later he was sent to negotiate for the return of the royal ship Black Bark, which had been taken by the French. Some doubt was expressed by the commissioners whether Sabyn had sufficient authority to conduct the matter, whereupon the king himself wrote to confirm Sabyn's power to act on his behalf. Sabyn again commanded a small fleet along the

---

Scottish coast in 1522, keeping Surrey informed by letter of the progress made in harrying the Scots.1

It was not unusual for seamen in royal service to be appointed to patrol certain areas of the seas, to protect English ships as well as the coasts. This duty had the advantage of providing opportunities for personal gain. In August 1543 a patent under the great seal of the high admiral commanded all admirals and others to aid Miles Middleton, yeoman of the Guard, who was licensed by the king to sail from Hull 'with two ships, furnished at his own cost, to annoy the king’s enemies and take prizes'.2

As well as the ship owners and captains already cited, the yeomen of the Guard serving as masters or captains in later years included Thomas Jermyn, master of the Less Bark in 1513 (when Sabyn was temporarily captain),3 and master of the Mary Rose and the Henry Grace a Dieu during the 1520s.4 James ap Jenkin, captain of the Anne of the Tower in 1522-3,5 and Thomas Ranger, captain of the Marie Fortune of London in 1546.6 Philip Lockyer of Bristol, whose death was reported by the duke of Suffolk to Sir William Paget in August 1545, was described by the former as 'a very good captain, one of the Guard'.7

Military activity under Henry VIII

There were two occasions when Henry VIII personally led his armies, in 1513 and 1544. The campaign in France during the summer of 1513 is well documented. Initially, the council felt it too perilous for the king to be exposed to the dangers of war, and favoured the appointment of a commander who would conduct the campaign in accordance with the king’s wishes. Nevertheless, since Henry was anxious to demonstrate his prowess as a warrior, and persisted in the view that his subjects would fight more eagerly if led personally by their sovereign, he finally persuaded the council to agree to his involvement.8

A warrant dated 28 June at Canterbury commanded John Daunce to pay to the master of the king’s barge, John Thurston, from the ‘war money’ in his keeping, the sum of £15. 5s. 4d. for the hire of barges to take the Guard from Greenwich to Faversham.9 Hall recounts that the king’s Guard at this time consisted of 600 men, who embarked for France from the royal manor

2. LP XVIII ii, 8.
3. BL Royal Ms. 14B xxxv; LP I, 3980.
4. LP IV iii, 6138; IV i, 244.
5. LP III ii, 2296 (2), 3062 (4).
6. LP XXI i, 538.
7. LP XX ii, 3.
8. Vergil, pp.197 and 199.
9. BL Stowe Ms. 146, f.85.
of Greenwich on 15 June 1513, wearing 'white gaberdines and caps'.\footnote{Hall, p.539; Hennell, p.65.} This large number is confirmed in various official documents recording the royal army and showing the totals for each part of the forces;\footnote{SP 1/3, f.159; E101/62/11; BL Lansdowne Ms. 818, f.2v, BL Cotton Ms. Faustina E.VI.6.} the whole of which has been estimated at 30,000 to 40,000 men.\footnote{Cruickshank, \textit{Army Royal}, p.15.}

The army was divided into the three traditional parts of fore ward (or vanguard), middle ward, and rear ward. The fore ward consisted of about 12,000 men, the middle ward over 14,000, and the rear ward around 7,500.\footnote{Ibid., pp. 28 and 31.} The middle ward was further subdivided into three, the centre part containing approximately 6,700 men, including the king with his Guard of 600, plus 800 of his household servants. The central division was flanked by a wing on the left and right, each consisting of 1,500 men plus artillery.\footnote{SP 1/3, f.159.} Undoubtedly this arrangement afforded the maximum protection possible for the inexperienced young monarch in his first military encounter. The king himself commanded the middle ward, while Sir Henry Marney, the captain of the Guard at that time, had command of the left wing with a force of 800, which included 400 servants of the petty captains and of the king’s Guard.\footnote{LP I ii, 2053, citing Shrewsbury Ms. A., f.83, Heralds' College; Lodge I, 1; SP 1/3, f.159.}

A full account of Henry's first military campaign has been given by Cruickshank,\footnote{Cruickshank, \textit{Army Royal}.} who has followed this by the sequel describing the occupation of the captured city of Tournai.\footnote{Cruickshank, \textit{Tournai}.} This will be discussed later.

As with the 1513 campaign led personally by Henry VIII, the yeomen of the Guard were involved in the warfare of 1544-5 when the king again headed his forces, besieging and eventually capturing Boulogne. The English army, consisting of some 36,000 men,\footnote{Davies thesis, p.265; Miller, p.157.} was certainly one of the largest sent abroad up to that time. On this occasion the Guard was 500 strong, headed by the captain, Sir Anthony Wingfield.\footnote{LP XIX ii, 424, p.239, citing BL Cotton Ms. Caligula E.IV, f.57, and Rymer xv. 52.} Even in times of war, the importance of ceremony was not forgotten, and the king left Calais for Boulogne in a great procession surrounded by his bodyguard.\footnote{Ibid.} War accounts for July and September 1544 show that John Piers, clerk of the cheque to the Guard, received wages to pay the following, the figures shown in brackets being for September:-

\begin{align*}
2 \text{ grand captains (Wingfield and Piers)} & @ 4s. \text{ a day} \\
2 \text{ petty captains} & @ 2s. \text{ a day} \\
124 \text{ yeomen in ordinary} & @ 40s. \text{ a month} \text{ [ + 1 for 22 days @ 16d. a day]} \\ \end{align*}

1. Hall, p.539; Hennell, p.65.
2. SP 1/3, f.159; E101/62/11; BL Lansdowne Ms. 818, f.2v, BL Cotton Ms. Faustina E.VI.6.
3. Cruickshank, \textit{Army Royal}, p.15.
4. Ibid., pp. 28 and 31.
5. SP 1/3, f.159.
6. LP I ii, 2053, citing Shrewsbury Ms. A., f.83, Heralds' College; Lodge I, 1; SP 1/3, f.159.
7. Cruickshank, \textit{Army Royal}.
8. Cruickshank, \textit{Tournai}.
10. LP XIX ii, 424, p.239, citing BL Cotton Ms. Caligula E.IV, f.57, and Rymer xv. 52.
11. Ibid.
40 archers on horseback @ 12d. a day
11/10 light horsemen @ 12d. a day
187/194 yeomen on foot @ 8d. a day totalling 362 [369].\(^1\) Comparison with the similar account for 1492 (maximum total 270 men) shows the increased strength of the bodyguard protecting Henry VIII.

Apart from the campaigns led personally by the sovereign, yeomen of the Guard were occasionally deployed in forces under one of the commanders appointed by the king. This was the case during the years 1520-22, in Ireland and in France, when the earl of Surrey was the commander. A draft circular to certain members of the Guard shows that they were to appear before the council on 24 March 1520, and to be ready to accompany the earl of Surrey to Ireland at Easter.\(^2\) Since their pay was to be increased from 4d. to 6d. a day, the yeomen were evidently among those discharged when reductions took place in 1515 or 1519, with a wage of 4d. a day and an obligation to serve the king when summoned. The circular also warned that if they did not appear on the appointed day, other suitable persons would be put in their places and they would be discharged.

A document in the State Papers shows that initially it was intended to send 400 members of the king's Guard to Ireland in 1520, included in a total of 1,000 men.\(^3\) The accounts of the treasurer of the Chamber for May show a sum of £40 paid to the lord admiral for 400 jackets 'for them that goeth with him in to Ireland'.\(^4\) The strength of the force eventually sent was reduced to just over half, however, and only 220 of the Guard went with Surrey.\(^5\) This reduction was probably an economy measure but may also have been influenced by the king's requirement for sufficient personnel to serve him in France in July, at the Field of Cloth of Gold, when 200 of the Guard were included in his large entourage.\(^6\) The earl of Surrey wrote to the king from Dublin on 23 July, informing him that sickness was so prevalent in the English pale that it was difficult to lodge the yeomen of the Guard in groups of 40, 30 or even 20 in towns which were clear of infection. Many of the Guard were anxious to return to England, some for fear of dying from the sickness, others because they could not live on their wages, and several wished to take care of their farms, which they feared were being neglected in their absence. Surrey reported that he had told them all that he dared not send any home until he

1. BL Additional Ms. 5,753, f.144 (July) and f.143 (September); LP XIX ii, 524, Iii (7) and Li (21).
2. LP III i, 669; SP 1/19, pp.224-5; Hennell, pp.74-75.
3. SP 60/1, p.69; LP III i, 670, Memoranda for Ireland.
4. E36/216, f.89v.
6. LP III i, 704 and 869. had approval from the king. In fact 18 of the 220 members of the Guard sent with Surrey had died by 24 September 1520.

In July/August, Henry VIII granted Surrey's requests to have horsemen sent from the north of England and Wales, and to discharge an appropriate number of the footmen of the Guard to cover the cost. The king's letter indicated what Surrey had informed him, that many of these footmen, being wealthy householders, would be contented to receive only 1d. or 2d. a day to return to England, if they were assured of 4d. a day after the wars were over. This suggestion obviously appealed to the sovereign, whose further letter to Surrey in September shows that 117 of the Guard were discharged and assigned 1d. a day from the royal coffers until the Irish war was ended. The royal accounts for 1 April 1521 also indicate that the rate of 1d. a day was indeed paid to certain members of the Guard, although others continued to receive 6d. a day, as promised in the circular of March 1520.

Surrey returned to England in March 1522, when he was accompanied by 65 yeomen of the Guard. In July he was sent to France, where his forces took the wealthy town of Morlaix. Hall mentions that the king greatly commended Surrey, and praised the members of his Guard, 'and specially fifty, which left pilfering and never went from the lord captain'. At the end of August Surrey was again dispatched overseas, entering Picardy with a force of over 14,000, together with 200 yeomen of the king's Guard.

Once again, a few brief references to the presence of the king's Guard are sufficient to indicate that the yeomen were employed in combat, even when the sovereign was not personally involved. From the organization of supplies, ships and men, to the battle itself, the yeomen of the Guard played a significant part in the warfare of the first two Tudor monarchs.
Why should they have been used in combat when the sovereign was not present? There may have been several reasons for this. As members of the royal bodyguard their loyalty to the king could be particularly relied upon. In addition, their experience and expertise in warfare was probably an important influence in selecting them for service under an appointed commander. Perhaps more importantly, it would seem wasteful both of finance and of

1. LP III i, 924, citing Lambeth Ms. 602, p.52 and St.P.II, 35.
2. LP III ii, App. 15, p.1569; J. S. Brewer and W. Bullen, eds., Calendar of the Carew Manuscripts 1515-1574
4. E36/216, f.131r.
5. SP D 95.
6. Ibid.
7. Ibid.
9. Ibid.
resources to keep men on the royal payroll merely as a reward for past services when their expertise could be utilized in this way, at little extra cost.

Garrison duties

(a) Calais

Several yeomen of the Guard served in the garrison at Calais, where positions were eagerly sought.\(^1\) Possibly this provided a potential means of entry to royal service, as well as to a career within the garrison itself. A record of soldiers serving in the town and castle of Calais on 8 October 1501 includes names of several archers who may have been yeomen of the Guard:- Henry Hill, William Dyer, William Hayward, Thomas Pinnock, John Gittons, John Allen, David ap Howell and John Richmond.\(^2\) John and Bartholomew Flamank were described as late soldiers of Calais when they were nominated to the next vacancies in the Guard in September 1511.\(^3\) In November 1518 John Pigot received a payment of £8.1s.4d. to cover his wages of 8d. a day from 3 March to 31 October. The warrant from the king to the treasurer of the Chamber, authorizing the payment, commanded that Pigot was to receive this daily rate as a reward until he entered into his former position at 8d. a day within the retinue of the town of Calais.\(^4\) Another yeoman of the Guard known to have served in the garrison was John Ovenden, who received wages of 4d. a day for 50 days from 1 April to 20 May 1520, on which date he entered into wages at Calais.\(^5\)

(b) Tournai

The military significance of the royal bodyguard did not always end as soon as the battle was over. As mentioned earlier, the campaign of 1513 terminated with the surrender of Tournai to the English king, who made a triumphal entry into the fallen city on Sunday, 25 September 1513. When Henry VIII returned to England he left in Tournai an armed force of 5,000\(^6\) to safeguard the city against possible attack by the French. According to Hall, this force included 400 of the Guard,\(^7\) and there is evidence from other sources to show that the yeomen of the Guard played a notable part in the garrison which was set up as a short-term measure until the war with France could be resumed in the following summer. The plans for this

---

2. E101/55/23, fos. 3r, 7r, and 8.
3. E101/417/7, m.136.
4. E101/418/12, m.14.
5. E36/216, f.100v.
further conflict did not mature, however, and the garrison continued to be manned for six years, becoming an increasing financial burden to the English crown.

What contribution did the members of the Guard make to the life of the garrison? Several of the yeomen held offices of various kinds, among them Henry Spurr, who was appointed chief bowyer and keeper of the bows of the ordnance in Tournai in 1515,1 and John Clogge, whose appointment as a gunner quartermaster was authorized by the king himself, in recognition of Clogge's 'true and faithful' service.2 In addition, Roger Hacheman was appointed keeper of the seal of the bailliage, or 'seal royal' in 1515, back-dated to the king's victory over the city on 21 September 1513.3 This particular appointment was a matter of concern to the lieutenant there in 1515, Lord Mountjoy, who communicated his feelings to Wolsey on 12 July. He pointed out that his predecessor, Sir Edward Poynings, had given the office to a learned man of the town who still retained it, and who was very suitable for the position, while Hacheman had 'neither learning nor great language'.4 Despite Mountjoy's objection, Hacheman was granted the office for life, although by September 1516 the office was held by a Tournaisien lawyer.5

The garrison posed many problems, in which members of the Guard became involved. Early in 1515 economy measures were introduced, which included administrative changes and a reduction in the garrison, although not in the Guard, which at that time totalled 314, plus a captain, Sir Richard Jerningham, and four petty captains.6 The morale of the occupying force was adversely affected by the economy measures, coupled with a rumour that it was proposed to pay the wages of the garrison monthly in arrears rather than in advance.7 According to Hall, all the soldiers rebelled except those who were of the Guard.8 Nevertheless, the situation was exacerbated by a yeoman of the Guard, Davy ap Howell, who succeeded in persuading many of the soldiers that they would lose a month's pay if the proposal were to be implemented, and he led the demonstration which took place outside the council's meeting place on 6 February 1515.9 The difficulties experienced by Lord Mountjoy led him to send a declaration to the king, showing what action was necessary to ensure the safe keeping of the city. Significantly, one of the points included in the declaration was a request for a letter to be

1. LP II i, 1375.
2. Cruickshank, Tournai, p.92.
3. LP II i, 714; Cruickshank, Tournai, pp. 8, 51 and 189.
4. LP II i, 701, citing BL Cotton Ms. Caligula D.VI.299.
5. Cruickshank, Tournai, p.189.
6. LP II ii, p.1514.
8. Hall, p.583; Hennell, pp.67-68.
sent from the king to his Guard, enforcing obedience to the lieutenant there.\(^1\) It is not clear whether Davy ap Howell was punished for his behaviour, but he may have lost his position at Tournai. Possibly he was the unnamed yeoman of the Guard referred to in Mountjoy’s letter to Wolsey of 12 July 1515, where the former complained that a member of the Guard recently mustered in England was ‘one that was put out from hence for his misrule and was one of the chief beginners of the business at my first coming’.\(^2\) The demonstration achieved the desired effect, however, and the soldiers were assured that wages would continue to be paid in advance.

Nevertheless, discontent among members of the garrison again arose over the method of wage payments in May 1518. A change to quarterly payments had been made in 1517, when Sir Richard Jerningham was appointed governor or lieutenant, but his skill in handling the garrison apparently avoided any trouble.\(^3\) On 22 April 1518, however, Wolsey addressed a letter to the gentlemen, constables and vinteners of Tournai indicating a proposal to pay them half yearly, to bring them in line with other garrisons, and asked them to confirm that they would be ‘content’ with this arrangement.\(^4\) This invitation to comment elicited strong and well-reasoned protests from the three groups concerned. Their replies were similar, especially those from the ten vinteners and fourteen constables, all of whom were also members of the Guard, as shown in Table 6, p.99.\(^5\) They pointed out that prices for food, drink and other commodities were high and that the local traders were reluctant to extend credit to the English. In addition, unlike other garrisons, they had to pay a tax of 40s. on a tun of wine and Is. on a barrel of beer. Attention was also drawn to the fact that the members of the garrison were not among friends, as were those in other garrisons, and that the currency was not worth so much in purchasing power.\(^6\) The constables continued their letter with a plea for the king to have consideration and pity for them, ‘considering the true and faithful service that we his poor Servants, yeomen of his most Honourable Guard with all the whole Retinue of the said Garrison, have done unto his Highness heretofore and hereafter intendeth to do’.\(^7\)

The statements made were fully supported by Jerningham in forwarding the letters to Wolsey, although it is not clear whether six-monthly pay was introduced before Tournai was

---

1. LP II i, 148 (22).
2. LP II i, 701; Cruickshank, Tournai, p.77.
5. Ibid.
6. Ibid.
Table 6: Yeomen of the Guard at Tournai who signed the letter of protest to Wolsey and the Council

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Vinteners</th>
<th>Constables</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Robert Leighton</td>
<td>John Prince</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Henry Birde</td>
<td>William Bentall</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gerard Osborne</td>
<td>Richard Forster</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Clement Frere</td>
<td>Robert Mitchell</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hugh Bennett</td>
<td>John Erdeley</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Griffith Rede</td>
<td>Thomas Gray</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roger Griffith</td>
<td>Thomas Stribithill</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Richard Heybourne</td>
<td>William Harford</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Allen</td>
<td>Richard Dobell</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Turner</td>
<td>Evan Bodmer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>John Brodger</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Thomas Wallett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Richard Stone</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Robert Axe</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Sources: BL Cotton Ms. Caligula E I, 146; LP II ii, 3321 and 3322; Strype, I ii, Appendix 4.

returned to the French in 1519. An unknown number of the Guard remained in the city until that time, when, as reported by Hall:-

‘In the end of March the king sent for all the yeomen of [the] Guard that were come from Toumai, and after many good words given to them, he granted to them 4d. the day without attendance, except they were specially commanded.’

Possible disaffection in the Guard

The loyalty shown to the king by the yeomen of the Guard rarely seems to have been doubted, but in 1524 a rumour was heard of possible disaffection by a few individuals. Sir William Fitzwilliam informed Wolsey on 13 May of a report that the Burgundians had taken certain Englishmen of Richard de la Pole’s who were formerly in the king’s Guard, ‘Tompson being one’. Fitzwilliam continued that he did not know whether this was true but that he had written to Fynes (the Burgundian leader) not to let them go for any ransom, as he would reward those who took the prisoners when he knew the king’s pleasure and Wolsey’s. The next day Fitzwilliam wrote again to Wolsey, saying he had received a letter from Fynes, denying that there were any Englishmen taken belonging to Richard de la Pole. Nevertheless, Fitzwilliam reported, a Burgundian archer of the garrison at Guisnes had told him that he saw

2. Hall, p.598.
3. LP IV i, 330, citing BL Cotton Ms. Caligula D.VIII, 298.
such Englishmen go into St. Omers.\textsuperscript{1} Nothing further has been discovered about this rumour, however.

Conclusion

As indicated throughout this chapter, members of the royal bodyguard were engaged in a wide variety of activities covering all aspects of warfare and national security. They were in evidence whenever there was a need to protect the king or his territories, and wherever the authority of the crown was to be upheld. As part of the royal affinity, they performed the duties allotted to them in a diligent way, and their trustworthy service to the monarch was extended also to his lieutenant. Nevertheless, some evidence of unrest, if not dissent, involving a few yeomen has been indicated, in the request for the king to write to the Guard enforcing obedience to the lieutenant of the garrison at Tournai, and possibly in the rumour of defection to Richard de la Pole. On the whole, though, the Guard’s loyalty to the monarch was never in doubt, and it continued to be a distinctive and permanent body which could be readily transformed into a military force, providing the nucleus of a royal army.

\textsuperscript{1} Ibid., 334.
Chapter 5

The Role of the Guard in the Localities

Sir John Fortescue, in his book The Governance of England, written in the 1470s, advised that the king might maintain his servants by office rather than land, so that he need not give away his own livelihood, and that such offices should be given to those who served only the king. By this means, Fortescue stated, the king would have ‘a greater might and a guard of his officers’ whenever he wished to call upon them. ‘For the might of the land, after the great lords thereof, standeth most in the king’s officers. For they best rule the countries where their offices are, which is in every part of the land.’

Fortescue considered that a bailiff could do more in his area than a man of degree without office, and that a forester of the king could bring more men to the field well arrayed than a knight or squire ‘of right great livelihood’ dwelling nearby who held no such office.

The practice of appointing royal servants to local offices was well established when Henry VII ascended the throne. Many yeomen of the Guard were among those who received such offices, and the volume of grants to them is striking owing to their great number as a specific group of royal retainers.

This chapter aims to show how the yeomen of the Guard were deployed in extending royal authority to the provinces, as part of their role in the king’s ‘bastard feudal’ affinity. A brief statement on bastard feudalism and the nature of the royal affinity is followed by a description of the hierarchy of local government offices. A substantial section then gives examples of the local offices to which individual members of the Guard were appointed. The fees and other benefits attached to these offices are also described. Details are then shown of the yeomen’s activities in their various local offices, including some of the problems encountered.

Bastard feudal society and the royal affinity

The so-called ‘bastard feudal’ society of the late middle ages and early modern period was a term first used towards the end of the nineteenth century by Plummer and developed in the mid-twentieth century by McFarlane. It was defined by the latter to describe a society ‘where the tenurial bond between lord and vassal had been superseded as the primary social tie by the personal contract between master and man.¹ In other words, the tenurial relationship had been replaced by the performance of service in return for a cash payment. Yet the link between them continued to be one of mutual benefit; while the lord or master expected certain services from members of his affinity, such as assistance in his business and local affairs, he would in return be prepared to use his influence in supporting the interests of those members, particularly where legal cases were involved. Although in this respect there was no more than a moral obligation on the lord’s part, his co-operation and potential protection was known as ‘good lordship’.

2. Ibid.

The royal affinity had the same basic characteristics as the affinities of the great magnates and lords. It consisted of the king’s household servants, his retainers, annuitants and tenants, as well as his more personal associates, courtiers and high-ranking officers. The affinity provided a retinue, both to protect the king and to display publicly his sovereignty and wealth. In addition, it supplied the means of extending royal authority throughout most regions of the country, and of keeping the king informed of local conditions. Therefore the affinity provided an effective tool for controlling substantial areas of the kingdom. In return for their service, whether paid or unpaid, members of the affinity looked directly to the king for his ‘good lordship’.

The monarch was particularly well placed to distribute his authority throughout the realm by appointing members of his affinity to crown offices in the localities. Although many of these offices could be served by a deputy, the status of the office holder was important, as it bestowed some prestige locally. Conversely, while appointment to a crown office was prestigious to an individual, it was also advantageous for the monarch to select individuals of standing in their own localities for deployment on the king’s behalf. In this way the natural leaders in a region could ensure co-operation among the gentry, at least in theory, to support the interests of the king. In addition to extending royal authority to the regions and ensuring that trustworthy men were placed in certain posts, grants of office were therefore also a means of rewarding the past service of individuals, and encouraging them to remain loyal.

The hierarchy of local government

To set in context the kind of offices to which members of the Guard were appointed, a brief outline follows on the organization of local government and its hierarchy of officials in the early Tudor period. Each shire, or county, was divided into administrative units of hundreds, boroughs and townships, and each of these divisions might be administered directly by an official of the king.¹ The principal county offices were those of sheriff, escheator, and justices of the peace. To be eligible for appointment to any of these offices, candidates were required to be land holders of some substance, that is worth at least £20 per annum, and justices of the peace had to be resident in the county. Other permanent officers in the counties were coroners (who were also required to be land-holders), constables, gaolers, customs controllers and collectors, and forest officials. The customs or port officers were usually required to serve personally in their posts.² In certain areas, known as franchises or liberties, where a powerful individual or a corporation held delegated royal authority to administer the king’s laws, the same administrative units were used, the officials being appointed by those holding the delegated authority. In such liberties the chief official was known as the steward rather than the sheriff, but all other offices were similar to the county offices.³

As the head of the county hierarchy of officials the sheriff was the chief financial officer and the principal representative of the crown within the shire. Some sheriffs held office for two counties, such as for instance Bedford and Buckingham or Warwick and Leicester.⁴ The sheriff was selected annually by the king, who made his choice by ‘pricking’ one of the three names submitted to him as suitable candidates for the office by the lords of the council, royal justices, barons of the Exchequer and Master of the Rolls.⁵ Because of his authority and responsibilities, the sheriff was usually selected from the higher gentry. As well as taking responsibility for the administration of justice, receiving and executing writs relating to the shire, and presiding over the county court, the sheriff controlled the selection of jurors and was authorized to raise the posse comitatus (county armed forces) in times of political crises.⁶ The sheriff had a staff of his own, including a deputy as under-sheriff, at least one receiver for revenues, clerks to keep the records of the local exchequer and chancery, sergeants and bailiffs. The regular local officials appointed as hundred bailiffs and constables, riding or itinerant bailiffs, constables of castles and townships, bedels and catchpolls, were liable to receive orders from the sheriff even if they were not actually of his staff.⁷

¹. H. M. Jewell, English Local Administration in the Middle Ages (Newton Abbot, Devon, and New York, 1972), p.42.
². Ibid., pp.33 and 37.
³. Ibid., pp.62-7. For fuller account see Jewell, pp.69-80.
⁵. LP V, 1518; Jewell, p.33; Bellamy, p.10.
The function of county escheator, formerly part of the sheriff’s duties, had evolved by the fourteenth century into a separate office. Like the sheriff, the escheator was appointed on an annual basis. Although the qualification for office of holding land to the value of at least £20 per annum continued to be the same as that for the sheriff, escheators tended to be appointed from the minor gentry. The main responsibility of the escheator was to ensure that the king received the feudal rights and revenues due to him from sources within the county. A principal function of the office, therefore, was to hold an inquisition post mortem upon the death of a tenant-in-chief, to determine the value of the lands held in chief, that is from the king. The escheator would take the lands into royal custody and establish who was the legal heir. If the deceased left an heir under age, the escheator arranged for a wardship to be made. Land also escheated to the king in cases where it was forfeited by attainder. A further important duty of the escheator was to restore ‘the temporalities’ (or the possessions and endowments) of religious houses upon the election of a new abbot or abbess. The office of escheator covered two counties in many instances, the country having been divided into specific areas or escheatries by the time of Henry V.

While the office of escheator declined to some extent towards the end of Henry VII’s reign, giving way to ad hoc commissions, the commission of the peace was growing in importance. Justices of the peace were appointed by the crown, acting on the advice of the chancellor, treasurer and council. In practice the local magnates and more powerful gentry probably influenced the choice of candidates through their network of contacts on the council. Justices of the peace were concerned with minor crime and disorder and had authority to make arrests, imprison suspects and send them for trial, as well as to take security for keeping the peace. By Tudor times the justices of the peace were drawn from magnates, knights of the shire, local gentry, lawyers and clergy.

Appointment of yeomen to county offices: fees and other benefits

On the whole yeomen of the Guard do not appear to have been appointed as sheriffs, although there may be a few exceptions. Three sheriffs who were possibly yeomen of the Guard were Anthony Hansard, pricked for Cambridgeshire and Huntingdonshire in 1523, Thomas Jermyn, selected for Norfolk and Suffolk in 1530, and Peter Motton, who was

---

4. Jewell, p.146; Bellamy, p.17.
5. Jewell, p.146; for development of commission of peace see Carpenter, pp.267-72 and Bellamy, pp.17-23.
appointed sheriff of Flint in November 1541.\(^1\) John Piers, clerk of the cheque to the Guard, was appointed bailiff and sheriff of the twelve hides of Glastonbury, Somerset, in November 1546,\(^2\) and David Cecil, a former yeoman of the Guard, became sheriff of Northamptonshire in 1532,\(^3\) when he was a sergeant at arms.

Among the yeomen appointed to the office of escheator were Henry Ley, for Devon and Cornwall in November 1487,\(^4\) John Markham, for Essex and Hertfordshire in November 1488,\(^5\) and Robert Lloyd for Denbigh, North Wales, in 1492 and 1509.\(^6\) Yeomen serving as collectors of customs and subsidies in ports (often called searchers of ships) included John Smethurst, appointed for the port of Yarmouth, Norfolk, on 18 September 1501,\(^7\) and William Keby, appointed for the port of Boston, Lincolnshire, in October 1509.\(^8\) It was in the interests of holders of this office to perform their duties diligently, since they received a proportion of any goods seized on the king’s behalf. John Smethurst’s patent, for instance, granted him ‘the usual wages with half the forfeitures’;\(^9\) and George Geffron’s grant of 11 June 1507 for the ports of Exeter and Dartmouth allowed him a proportion of all forfeitures ‘taken by him or his deputy.’\(^10\) The latter shows that, despite the normal requirement for this office to be performed in person, it was sometimes possible to serve by deputy. In March 1522 Robert Wood or Delwood was licensed to appoint deputies in his office of customer at Kingston-on-Hull, ‘having been retained as usher of the Chamber’.\(^11\) On the other hand, John Whittington was excused from duties at court c.1508 because he had a ‘chargeable’ office at Bristol. This was as customer or searcher in the port there.\(^12\)

Yeomen of the Guard who were appointed receivers of lands included John Pole, receiver of the earl of Huntingdon’s lands in Somerset and Dorset by 1491,\(^13\) and Anthony Hansard, receiver of the lands of the late Lord Welles and Lady Cecilia, in August 1509.\(^14\) Those holding the office of steward included Owen ap Griffith, appointed steward and hayward of the

---

1. LP III ii, 3583; PRO Lists and Indexes, ix (1963); LP XVI, 1391 (67).
3. LP V, 1598 (10).
8. LP I, 552; LP I i, 218 (10).
12. BL Egerton Ms. 2603, f.3; CPR Henry VII, ii, p.77.
13. E101/413 (2), f.23r; see also E101/414/16, f.81r; E101/415/3, f.147r and E101/414/6, f.101.
lordship of Laughame, Carmarthen, in September 1485, and John Sandford, appointed steward of the town of Marton, Westmorland, in September 1514. John Byde was appointed constable of Totnes, Somerset, in 1486, and Thomas Gray held the posts in reversion of steward and constable of Castle Donington, Leicestershire, in 1535. Among those holding office as coroner were Henry Strete for Devonshire in the 1520s-30s, and Ralph Warbleton, yeoman of the crown, in the lordship of Holderness, Yorkshire, from 1522.

The bulk of the varied offices granted to the yeomen of the Guard throughout the reigns of the first two Tudor monarchs included those of bailiff, parker, forester or ranger, keeper or constable of castle and gaoler, as well as tax collector of various kinds. More details can be seen in Appendix D. Many of these offices involved ensuring that the revenues due to the crown were actually paid, while others were concerned with maintenance and control of lands and forests, or security. The fees paid for these offices varied to some extent, and often the true value was far greater, with additional benefits such as rights of pasture or wood for fuel, or the provision of a lodge as a dwelling.

Robert Bonnington, bailiff of the town of Chapel Brampton, Northamptonshire, in June 1510, received 2d. a day (£3. 0s. 10d. per annum), while John Hickling was paid 1d. a day in 1530 as bailiff of the lordship of Moulton, Northamptonshire, with 40s. per annum as keeper of the warren there. In July 1538 William Bonde was appointed reeve and bailiff of Charlton Camville, Somerset, receiving 'the pasturing of 100 sheep, the farm of one acre of meadow, pasture for 16 beasts upon the down and in other places, and the keeping of two woods there with herbage of the same within the lordship of Carleton Somers'. At the same time Bonde was appointed bailiff of the adjoining hundred of Horethorne, taking two loads of wood every year. These benefits were in addition to 'the usual fees' for the offices. Richard Pigot received 4d. a day (£6. 1s. 8d. annually) in 1486 as keeper of Portnall park, Surrey, and John Whitwell, as keeper of the garden of Langley and overseer of the garden of Woodstock in 1511, was paid 10 marks (£6.13s. 4d.) per annum. John Baldwin, one of the four foresters of Galtres

1. C82/2 (3), m.369; Campbell, i, p.46.
2. LP I, 5395; LP I ii, 3324 (9).
4. Somerville, p.574.
6. LP III ii, 2074 (8).
7. LP I, 1109; LP I i, 519 (49).
8. LP IV iii, 6363 (6).
9. LP XIII i, 1519 (41).
10. Ibid.
12. LP I, 1868.
forest, Yorkshire, received 4d. a day upon appointment in September 1485,1 and Richard Frere's fee as ranger of Kingsbere, alias Westbere, forest in county Southampton was 2d. a day in 1496.2 The fee for the ranger of Waltham forest, however, held by Ralph Coterell, yeoman of the crown, in 1485 and William Rolte in 1521, was 6d. a day.3

In 1492 William Bendell received three offices in one patent, all in the county of Gloucestershire - as bailiff of the hundred of Berkeley, with an annual fee of 40s., parker of Whitecliffe park, also with 40s. annually, and bailiff of the lordship or manor of Arlington, at 20s., making a total in fees of £5 per annum.4 Robert Wighthill’s grant of 10 January 1496 as controller of the works and woods and supervisor of the foresters, park keepers and officers of the woods in the manors of Woodstock, Havebergh, Stonefield and Wotton, Oxford, as well as Woodstock park, gave him a variety of benefits. He was to receive 11d. a day, together with four cartloads of hay and six cartloads of wood for fuel, pasture for two cows and two horses, and a mansion within Woodstock manor known as ‘the controller’s lodging’.5 John Gilmin’s patent as keeper of Bristol castle in February 1509 included the profits of the small close of six acres there, worth 10s. a year, and of the moats of the castle.6 John Punche, yeoman of the crown, as constable of Shrewsbury castle, ‘with the keeping of the gaol and prisoners there’, received a fee of 71d. a day (£11. 8s. 11d. p.a.) in September 1485, with a further grant of a meadow near Hencote, at an annual rent of 12d.7 while Peter Motton, constable of Pembroke castle in March 1528, was paid at the rate of £5 per annum.8

These examples by no means exhaust the type of office in which the yeomen served, but are the most representative. They may be compared with the use made of royal servants in the reigns of Edward IV and Richard III, when yeomen of the crown were appointed to similar offices. For instance in 1474 Hugh Shirley was escheator in Hereford and the marches of Wales adjacent,9 in June 1482 Thomas Patyngeham was bailiff of the lordship of Walsall, Staffordshire,10 and John Sylton was a collector of customs and subsidies in the port of

2. CPR Henry VII, ii, p.85.
3. E405/75, fos.8v and 18v; C82/4, m.17; Campbell, i, pp.230 and 250; CPR Henry VII, i, p.110. For Rolte, LP III ii, 1451 (4).
4. CPR Henry VII, i, p.391.
5. CPR Henry VII, ii, p.45.
7. Campbell, i, p.51; CPR Henry VII, i, p.8.
8. LP IV ii, 4124 (15).
10. E404/77/3, m.28.
Chichester,1 and in August 1484 Nicholas Rigby had been granted for life the constableship of the king’s castle of Bodiam, Sussex, with the keeping of the park there.2

Among the more unusual grants was that of Robert Rake, yeoman of the crown, whose appointment as keeper of Freemantle park, county Southampton, in September 1486, included in addition to ‘the ancient emoluments of the office’ a payment of 5 marks annually for life ‘for conveying to the park by pipes and carts a sufficient supply of water for the game and wild animals’ there, ‘it having come to the king’s knowledge that game and wild animals of Freemantle park often die from want of water in seasons of drought’.3 Other unusual grants were those received by Henry Marton and Baldwin Heath. Henry Marton was appointed to the governorship of the lead mines in the lordship of Middleham in November 1493, succeeding Edward Walton, another yeoman, who forfeited the office by his rebellion.4 Baldwin Heath was appointed surveyor of the king’s ‘stallions and studs’ in the counties of Warwickshire and Worcestershire in December 1519.5 This office gave Heath authority to appoint three servants to attend the horses and break in their foals, and a smith to administer medicines, with 4d. a day for himself and certain pastures, 2d. a day for each of the servants, and 40s. a year for the smith, to be paid from the revenues of Warwick’s and Spencer’s lands. In addition, Heath was appointed keeper of the stables in the manor of Upton, Worcestershire, and of the lodge and colthouse in Budbrooke, Warwickshire, with 100s. allowed for mowing, 23s. 4d. for forage, collars, shoeing, etc., for each of three ‘stallions’, and for every foal broken in.6

Many examples may be found where office-holders took the opportunity to add to their spheres of activity in the area of an initial grant, being well placed to find out which offices became available. One of the yeomen concerned was John Barkatt, already bailiff of the lordship of Chaddesley Corbett, Worcestershire, when he was granted in June 1508 the fishery of Harvington at a rent of 20s., the herbage of the park there at a rent of 20s., the farm of Harvington at a rent of 53s. 4d., and the profit of the ‘chase of coneys’ there at a rent of 6s. 8d.7 John Braband also acquired additional offices. He already held the crown fee of 6d. a day from 2 July 1509, and was appointed bailiff of the lordship of Exminster, Devon, in October of that year, with the use of the meadows, coney warren, fishing, and a tenement and stable. A year later he received a fresh patent, to include the office of keeper of the woods called Otterbury, with the rabbit warren in Ken and Exminster, to date from Michaelmas 1509. On 11 April 1511 this patent was again renewed, to add to the foregoing two meadows called Woodmede, alias Lachemershe, near Otterbury wood, as well as a garden with the tenement and stable.

Offices granted in survivorship and reversion

In some cases a patent was surrendered by the holder in exchange for a new one to include another person, either a colleague or relative, in survivorship. This type of grant ensured that the original grantee kept his patent but chose his successor, and when the position became vacant it could be automatically claimed by the second party. John Gilmin, who was appointed keeper of Bristol castle in February 1509, was granted a new patent on 26 April 1515, appointing him also as doorward of the castle, in survivorship with his colleague John Williams. Following the death of Williams, a patent of 27 June 1524 appointed Gilmin to both offices together with his son John, an usher of the Chamber, in survivorship. Thomas Johns and Thomas his son were appointed keepers of Witeley park, Surrey, in survivorship, in July 1521, on surrender by the father of his patent dated 20 September 1514 granting the same to him and his son Robert, ‘now deceased’.

Other grants in survivorship were made by agreement with another courtier, often for a cash consideration, to enhance his standing or control in a particular area, or to provide certain advantages. For example, in September 1510 Henry Skillman received a grant in survivorship with Sir John Petche as keeper of Eltham park, of the houses in Eltham manor and of the new park of Horne. These offices had been held by Skillman alone since September 1485. Robert Acurs, another yeoman, and Anthony Knyvet, gentleman usher of the Privy Chamber, were granted in survivorship the offices of bailiff and keeper of Barkeswell park, Warwickshire, with the herbage and pannage, in January 1529. Even high-ranking courtiers such as Sir Charles Somerset and Sir William Sandys obtained offices as parker, the former at Postern park,

1. LP I, 249 and 571; LP I i, 132 (9) and 218 (28).
2. LP I, 1255; LP I i, 604 (11).
3. LP I, 1602; LP I i, 749 (22).
5. LP II i, 380.
6. LP IV i, 464 (27).
7. LP III ii, 1451 (20).
8. CB2/354; C66/613, m.6; LP I, 1223; LP I i, 587 (2).
9. Campbell, i, p.34.
10. LP IV iii, 5243 (27).
Derby,1 and the latter at Crookham, Berkshire.2 Fortescue indicates the reason for the advantage to be gained from such appointments, suggesting that 'such men as serve about the king's person or in his council, may have in their counties a parkership for their disport, or such another office as they may keep by their deputies'.3

Grants in reversion also became fairly common under the early Tudors, in contrast to the preceding Yorkist regime, when they were very rare owing to a reluctance to allow office-holding by an implied hereditary title.4 This type of grant took effect when the current office-holder died or relinquished the post. On 14 November 1509 James Borough was appointed bailiff, in reversion, of the lordships of Sutton-on-Derwent and Elvington, Yorkshire, which office was currently held by one John Eglisfeld.5 In December 1530 William Morice received the grant of office in reversion as surveyor and general receiver of the possessions of Margaret, late countess of Richmond and Derby, the king's grandmother, in England, Wales and the marches thereof, which office had been granted earlier to James Morice (William's father) and Hugh Edwards, deceased.6

Appointments to the office of one of the 24 yeomen of the crown in receipt of the crown fee, or to sergeant at arms, were also often made in reversion or survivorship. In June 1528 Edward Ingham, yeoman usher of the Chamber, received a grant in reversion of the crown fee of 6d. a day which had been granted to William Standon by patent of 28 May 1513.7 Henry Holden in December 1529 received the reversionary grant of the crown fee held by Hugh Parker.8 John Amyas and Thomas his son were granted the office of sergeant at arms in survivorship, in April 1523, on surrender of John's patent of 16 February 1520.9

Contemporary conduct in securing offices

The proximity of courtiers to the king, or their cordial relationship with one of his ministers or personal servants, was often crucial to the outcome of a bid to acquire a particular office or property lease. Probably a typical example of contemporary attitudes is indicated in the letter sent to Cromwell on 30 June 1533 by Nicholas Jackson, sergeant at arms and a former yeoman of the Guard, concerning a grant which he was hoping to obtain from the king:-

1. Campbell, i, p.327, citing Lancaster Roll, 98b.
2. LP I, 3789.
5. LP I, 5585.
6. LP IV iii, 6803 (31).
7. LP IV ii, 4445 (10).
8. LP IV iii, 6135 (29).
9. LP III ii, 2992 (12).
'You promised me the farm of Canne Hall, for which several persons are making labour with the king. Make what haste you can, and let the lease endure for 60 or 80 years. As I am the king's servant I should have it as well as another.'

As E. W. Ives demonstrates in his detailed study of the career of Sir William Brereton, the methods used by courtiers to further their own interest were often ruthless, and it was not uncommon for a person of some standing to oust deliberately an existing office holder. Evidence of this behaviour may be seen in the case of Nicholas Poyntz (later Sir Nicholas), who was appointed keeper of Micklewood chase in Gloucestershire in February 1533, which office Thomas ap Guilliam, one of the Guard, had held since February 1510. A letter sent by Poyntz to Cromwell early in February 1533 reveals such a situation, and even a twinge of conscience:-

'... Whereas the king gave Thomas ap Gwillyms the keepership of Micklewood chase in Gloucestershire but afterwards, at your desire, gave it to me for term of my life, I beg you will let me know what is the king's pleasure concerning Gwillym's grant. I suppose I should have obtained it by gentleness, but do not like to meddle therein without knowing your further pleasure.'

Poyntz's gain was short-lived, however, since in February 1535 Thomas ap Guilliam and his son John were granted in survivorship the offices of ranger of the Forest of Dean, Gloucestershire, bailiff of Fownhope and Mansell Lacy, Herefordshire, and keeper of Micklewood chase, Gloucestershire, on surrender of the earlier grants to Thomas alone.

Speed of action was also necessary to secure positions which were likely to attract several applicants. This is well illustrated by William Sabyn's success in gaining the controllership of the Ipswich customs in August 1527. By June of that year it was known that Sir Edward Echingham, who held the office, was ill. Henry Wingfield, who through family connections was probably one of the first to hear of Echingham's condition, made a bid for the office. He had the backing of the duke of Suffolk, who obtained the support of the duke of Norfolk, the lord treasurer. Walter Walshe, a groom of the Privy Chamber, was asked to approach Henry VIII upon the matter, and the king agreed to the appointment, conditional upon Norfolk's opinion. Suffolk informed Walshe that Norfolk was agreeable and Walshe was asked to solicit the king further for Henry Wingfield. Norfolk also approached Lord Rochford and asked him to speak to the king about the suit. By 15 July only Walshe's final solicitation remained to be

1. LP VI, 727
3. LP VI, 196 (40).
4. LP I, 909 and 1000; see also LP I i, 381 (84) and 447 (27).
5. LP VI, 133.
made, and Echingham had died no more than a week earlier. But Sabyn obviously acted even faster, as he was able to secure a grant under the great seal for the office on 23 August.1 As Steven Gunn points out, 'with Wolsey abroad, Norfolk and Suffolk in the country, Rochford only just on his way to court and Wingfield too busy to come to London, the situation may have been exceptional.'2 Nevertheless, Sabyn was influential in Ipswich, his native town. He was the former yeoman of the crown and noted sea captain who was known personally to Henry VIII, and by this time he had become a sergeant at arms.3

In other cases persons of rank were granted offices when the yeomen surrendered them or died. In March 1513 Sir William Sandys was appointed bailiff of Crookham, Berkshire, and keeper of both parks there, on surrender of John Stanshaw’s patent of 24 September 1485.4 Following the death of Lewis ap Rice, Sir Francis Bryan was appointed to the offices of bailiff and park keeper of Hanslope, Buckinghamshire.5 Upon the death of Edmund Horsley of the Guard in 1537, Sir Giles Capell petitioned Cromwell, unsuccessfully, for his offices in Beaulieu.6

In addition to grants of office by the king, members of the Guard occasionally received an appointment from a nobleman. In January 1545 John Piers, clerk of the cheque to the Guard, was appointed clerk of the courts of Henry Percy, earl of Northumberland, in Yorkshire.7

Service on commissions

There was another way in which yeomen of the Guard were involved in county activities. This was by their appointment to serve on a variety of commissions, not only in preparation for war, as shown in chapter 4, but in peace time also. In September 1492 John Bingham was one of six commissioners appointed to oversee Richard Berkeley and James Rawson, masters respectively of the ships the Mary and the Anthony, both of Winchelsea. Together with other vessels, these had been appointed to protect the ships and fishermen of the Cinque Ports. The commissioners were to levy contributions for the expenses involved from those who desired to fish under protection.8 In November 1506 John Edwardes was on a commission to enquire of wards, marriages, reliefs, etc., in Warwickshire and Worcestershire,9 and in November 1508

1. Ibid.
2. Ibid.
3. Bindoff, iii, p.242; E101/417/7, m.108; LP I, 3591, 4474, 5112, 5761; LP II ii, 4509.
4. LP I, 3789.
5. LP III ii, 3214 (13).
6. LP Addenda, I i, 1251, citing SP 241; LP XIII i, p.582.
8. CPR Henry VII, i, p.415.
John Dyson received a commission to enquire in the county of Stafford 'of the lands of felons, of widows who had married without licence, etc.' David Cecil served on several commissions for sewers, in Lincolnshire in December 1503 and March 1524, and in Rutland and Lincolnshire in July 1505. Robert Kirk was one of two commissioners appointed in April 1521 to make inquisition in all counties concerning false weights and measures, with £20 a year from the fines and forfeitures. Among the yeomen serving on commissions for the collection of the subsidy were John Amadas, for Devon in 1523-4, and John Flamank for the hundred of Trigg, Cornwall, in 1524-7. Robert Langdon, a commissioner of the peace in Cornwall in 1538, and Richard Selman, who served on many commissions of the peace for Shropshire and Staffordshire between 1508 and 1539, may have been the yeomen of the Guard of those names. More positive examples are found, however, of sergeants at arms, formerly of the Guard, serving on these particular commissions. Among these were Henry Thornton in Somerset, in February 1531, and December 1532 to January 1533; Thomas Greenway in Buckinghamshire, in November 1512, October 1514 and December 1536; and David Cecil in Rutland in 1531/2.

Activities of office holders

Some evidence of the activities of early Tudor office-holders may still be found. To start at the highest level, the circumstances of David Cecil's second term of office as sheriff of Northamptonshire illustrate both the reasoning behind the selection of a particular individual for the position, and the fact that the king was not bound to choose one of the three names submitted to him. The surviving correspondence also shows that the manipulation of jurors by sheriffs was an accepted fact at the time. Cecil had sought Cromwell's assistance for re-appointment as sheriff in the coming year. In a letter of 4 November 1532 Cecil reminded Cromwell that he had promised that he should lose nothing by taking the office, but pointed out that he would be a great loser unless he had the office for a further term. At this

5. LP III ii, 3282 (iii); LP IV i, 547, p.233.
7. LP XIII i, 384 (17, 63).
9. LP V, 119 (36) and 1694 (ii).
10. LP, 3522 and 5506; LP XI, 1417 (5).
11. LP V, 119 (55) and 1694 (ii).
time the lands of the former sheriff, Sir William Spencer, recently deceased, were in dispute, since one of Lady Spencer’s brothers, Edmund Knightley, was attempting to ‘defeat the king’s title to the heir’, despite an agreement reached in the matter between Lady Spencer and the executors.1 Cromwell had received letters from Sir Thomas Audley and Edward Montague, both dated 4 November 1532, recommending that Cecil should be appointed sheriff of Northamptonshire again in the coming year. Each letter shows that there was a strong reason for doing so, apart from the advantage to Cecil himself. Audley’s letter informed Cromwell that ‘David Cecil, the sheriff, has endeavoured himself uprightly for the king and shows me there is no doubt in the jury, but that the king shall be truly served.’2 Montague advised Cecil’s continuance in office ‘as the king’s matters concerning Spencer and Mauntel’s lands are not yet found.’3 These comments clearly show that, with Cecil in office, his influence over the selection of jurors would ensure a decision in the king’s favour. A statement in Audley’s letter also shows that he would have recommended Cecil to serve again but the judges advised that he could not do so.4 In the event the three names submitted to the king for sheriff of Northamptonshire were Sir Thomas Tresham, Thomas Griffith and Sir William Parre. The king chose none of these but added the name of ‘Davy Cissell’ in the margin of the document, and Cecil was duly appointed.5

Apart from such well-documented examples, evidence exists of office-holders’ more mundane activities. Among the surviving accounts of escheators who were yeomen of the Guard are those of Thomas Grove, appointed to the office for Bedfordshire and Buckinghamshire on 5 November 1499,6 Edmond Huntwade, appointed escheator for Northamptonshire and Rutland on 6 November 1489,7 and Nicholas Owdeby, appointed escheator for Lincolnshire on 5 November 1490.8 A few of the ledgers and accounts have survived of George Geffron, collector of customs and subsidies on exports in the ports of Exeter and Dartmouth and adjacent places. These cover only the years 1523-24, 1528-29 and 1530-33,9 although he was originally appointed to office as early as June 1507.10 The accounts

---

1. Ibid., 1051, 1298.
2. Ibid., 1518.
3. Ibid., 1517.
4. Ibid., 1518.
5. Ibid., 1598 (10).
7. Calendar of Fine Rolls, 325; E150/671; CIPM, i, 557, 666, 667.
8. Calendar of Fine Rolls, 341; E150/1238 (accounts for October 1492).
9. E122/42/8; E122/42/10; E122/201/7, 43/3, 43/5 and 43/8. dating from Michaelmas 1533 to March 1534 were completed by Geffron’s widow and executrix, Joan Geffron.¹

Accounts of receipts by the treasurer of the Chamber in Henry VII’s reign also indicate that the yeomen were actively engaged in collecting revenues for the king. Sums of £13 and £20 respectively were received by the treasurer from John Watts and John Amyas in the autumn of 1487.² In June 1489 receipts are recorded of £40.7s. 6d. from Henry Walker and £17 from Thomas Trollop ‘for the collectors of Lincolnshire’,³ and of £283 from the same two yeomen in July ‘for Lindsey in Lincolnshire’.⁴

Two examples show the yeomen safeguarding the king’s interests against tax evasion.
David Gough, yeoman of the crown, petitioned the king in October 1488 for a piece of broad cloth and three kerseys which were forfeited to the crown as the owner intended to send them overseas without paying the customs duties. Henry VII signified his agreement to this request to the officers of the Exchequer at their discretion, provided that thereby ‘no man be injured by us contrary to our laws’⁵. Richard Braine, yeoman of the crown, a riding forester of the Forest of Dean, seized as goods forfeited to the king a quantity of fish worth £40 which had been purchased at Minehead, Somerset, in December 1500 and was being conveyed on the river
Severn to Gloucester, presumably without payment of the relevant dues.⁶

Problems encountered by office holders and commissioners

There were occasions when the yeomen were obstructed in their duties, perhaps due to personal rivalry or ill-feeling locally. Henry Birde evidently experienced some difficulty in carrying out his duties as bailiff of Ashbourne and of Wirkworth, Derbyshire, in 1534. A letter addressed to all tenants and inhabitants in these places ordered them to pay to the bailiff and his deputy the rents and customs due to the king, and to assist him in his office, ‘not letting for Sir Thomas Cokayne nor Sir Henry Sacheverell nor any other’.⁷ A communication sent to John Scudamore from Robert Burgoyne on 7 February 1540 required the former, ‘in accordance with the enclosed letter of the Chancellor unto us directed,’ to put the bearer, William Penson, one of the king’s Guard, ‘in peaceable possession of his office of keeping the park of Hallow , ¹. E122/43/10.

². E101/413/2 (1), fos.7r and 10r.
³. ibid., f.25r.
⁴. ibid., f.26r.
⁵. E404/80, m.336.
CCR Henry VII], ii, 66.
⁷. LP VII, 1268.
At times complaints were made about the actions taken by the yeomen in the exercise of their offices. One of the yeomen, John Reynolds, alias John ap Rhydderch, was clerk of the peace and of the crown for Merioneth and Anglesey, North Wales, from February 1542. He was co-defendant with the clerk of the peace for Carnarvonshire in a suit brought by the inhabitants of the counties concerned, complaining of 'demands for excessive fees and excessively frequent appearances from persons bound over to the peace.'

The difficulties likely to be encountered in carrying out duties, allied with an element of personal enmity, can be seen in a case in Cornwall. At an unrecorded date between 1527-30, John Amadas, sergeant at arms, and Thomas Mone, yeoman of the Guard (presumably Amadas's son-in-law of that name), were two of the four commissioners appointed to investigate robberies at sea, upon the complaint of Barnard Bullen, a Breton merchant. The culprits, at least ten in number, were all inhabitants of Looe, Cornwall. When brought before the commissioners in Looe parish church, they confessed to the crime and restored goods to the value of £3 to Bullen, agreeing to compensate him for the rest of his goods which they had stolen. At this moment, one William Kendall entered the church, allegedly with about a hundred persons whose identity was unknown to the commissioners, 'riotously arrayed with swords, bucklers and other unlawful weapons', saying that he would answer for the robbery and malefactors, calling the commissioners knaves and striking at them, so that their lives were endangered. The rioters then left the church, so the commissioners were unable to take further action. They requested that writs of subpoena be directed against Kendall and those accompanying him, as well as against the thieves already identified, commanding them to appear in Star Chamber.

Kendall's answer to the bill of complaint against him consisted of a complete denial of the events as cited. He stated that on the feast of St. George he went on pilgrimage with his wife and a servant lad to St. George's chapel, having no knowledge that the commissioners were in the town. Kendall saluted the commissioners 'in as loving manner as he could', and they all went to the house of one of the commissioners named Mayowe and drank together. Later, when returning home after dining at a friend's house, he received a message to go to a further meeting of the commissioners in the chapel. He had only a dagger and a white rod in his hand, and was accompanied by a servant of the king named John Lytle (presumably the yeoman of the Guard of that name). 1 Kendall declared that Amadas used 'high and wilful words to him' and told him he lied, whereupon Kendall retaliated and 'with the back of his hand casting abroad happened to strike' Amadas on the cheek without injuring him. 2 He denied assembling a hundred persons and said great numbers of people went to the chapel on pilgrimage. The outcome of the case has not been found. It is worth noting, however, that the name of William Kendall appears as the defendant in fifteen cases in Star Chamber, mainly on charges of assault and forcible entry. 3 As will be shown elsewhere in this chapter, Kendall was a gentleman servant of the marquis of Exeter.

1. LP XV, 173; BL Additional Ms. 11,041, f.39.
4. Ibid.
5. STAC 2/26, 257; Blake, p.392.

Amadas probably acted in a high-handed manner himself and obviously had enemies, since on several occasions he claimed to have been threatened and violently assaulted. One such attack took place in Calstock, Cornwall, when Amadas and a companion were assaulted. Amadas declared that one of the four assailants, named Thomas Tomson, had used slanderous and spiteful words against the king shortly before the attack. 4 Other assaults on Amadas occurred at Tavistock. On 10 November 1528, when he was on his way to church to hear mass, a gentleman named John Fitz, together with a riotous assembly, attacked Amadas 'with most violent strokes laid at him with swords as though they would have hewn him in pieces.' Amadas defended himself 'with all his might and power' and was eventually assisted by one of his servants who heard of the affray, otherwise he would have been 'utterly slain out of hand.' 5 Fitz apparently threatened to murder Amadas on more than one occasion, and some time later, on 29 May (presumably 1529), 'with other malefactors and riotous persons', he lay in wait for Amadas. 6 According to Amadas, he was returning home from Tavistock abbey, and went through the parish churchyard, where he was fiercely assaulted and driven to the church door, the attackers having no 'regard to God or the holy place ... or to any dread of your grace or of your laws.' Amadas managed to flee into the church but was followed and assaulted again so violently that he expected to die. Somehow he then made his way to the abbey church, with the assailants still in pursuit, where he was saved by the monks there who, seeing the 'abominable riot', closed the choir door. The servant who came to defend Amadas was injured by violent blows, including one on the head, but (miraculously it seems) Amadas

1. Ibid.
2. Ibid.
4. STAC 2/1, 149.
5. Ibid., 148.
6. Ibid.
evidently escaped serious injury himself. This does suggest that his reports were highly exaggerated, but the fact that the assaults took place at all appear to indicate that there were people with a serious grudge against him.

Complaints levelled against individual yeomen

Complaints were also directed towards yeomen who were felt to abuse their authority.
As a yeoman of the crown and supervisor of the king’s ordnance works in Ashdown forest, Sussex, in the 1490s, Robert Harrison was seen by local people as a man of some influence in the area. Harrison was the defendant in a Star Chamber case where it was alleged by one Hugh Barris that Harrison had unlawfully entered into lands which he claimed by right of his wife Elizabeth, sister and one of the two heirs of William Jupe. Barris was married to the other heir, Jupe’s niece Joan, daughter of his sister Margaret, and they had occupied certain lands in the Hartfield area until the time that Elizabeth married Harrison. Immediately afterwards Harrison had entered the lands of Hugh and Joan Barris, claiming these as well as the lands of his wife Elizabeth. The plaintiff also stated that when he was commanded to appear before the king’s council at Greenwich Harrison had set three men upon him, grievously wounding him. Barris claimed to be daily in jeopardy and fear of his life ‘of the said Robert and his affinity’, and alleged that he and his wife were ‘not of power to have the remedy in the common law because the said Robert is of so great might and strength’. Predictably, Harrison denied the charges against him, claiming that by a series of enfeoffments and a sale the disputed property belonged to his wife and himself. He also denied any responsibility for the attack on Barris, and stated that he had dismissed the servant concerned.

Incidentally, this case is printed in the volume Sussex Record Society 16, where it is assigned to the date c.1523. The manuscript, however, refers to a fine levied in Hilary term ‘in the ninth year of the reign of the king our sovereign lord that now is’. This has been interpreted by the transcriber and editor as the ninth year of Henry VIII (22 April 1517 to 21 April 1518), whereas it relates to Henry VII’s reign and therefore dates between 22 August 1493 and 21 August 1494. Robert Harrison, who was active in the Hartfield area, had died by August 1502, and no other yeoman of that name has been discovered.

1. E404/80, m.326; E405/78, f.39v; E404/81/1, m.108.
2. STAC 2/3, 170; P. D. Mundy, ed., Abstracts of Star Chamber Proceedings relating to the County of Sussex, Henry VII to Philip and Mary, Sussex Record Society, 16 (1913), pp.8-10.
3. Ibid.
4. STAC 2/3, 172.
The use of yeomen in county administration

Instances are recorded of the yeomen acting as witnesses or informers about alleged seditious statements made by certain persons. Some action needed to be taken in such cases in order to prevent possible disturbances. A young man named Kettilby, calling himself James Billingford, was evidently under suspicion for statements which he had made in various places. Adam Holland, yeoman of the Guard, signed a statement, on 21 January 1535, reporting Kettilby's words spoken at the Bull's Head in Nottingham at the previous season of Martinmas [10-12 November], when Kettilby claimed that he was the queen's kinsman and her scholar at the university, that he was henchman to the duke of Norfolk, and that the late lord Willoughby of Lincolnshire was his uncle.1

Thomas Catlyn, yeoman of the Guard and bailiff of Leicester town, was involved in the examination of men accused of seditious statements on at least two occasions. A surgeon named Robert Molton appeared before the mayor of Leicester, John Barton, and Catlyn as bailiff, on 27 March 1532, when he denied statements which he was alleged to have made against William Gibson, an innholder of the town.2 On 14 December 1533 Ralph Churlis, a baker of Monstull, Leicestershire, was accused of speaking seditious words to Catlyn, threatening that local bakers would bring white bread into the town for the Christmas season contrary to instruction, and that they would have 'staves in their baskets to defend them'.3

There was some encouragement for royal servants to act as informers, since they were likely to be well rewarded for their vigilance. In 1537 Henry Birde, together with another person, reported that, contrary to the Acts of Parliament (which were quoted), Nicholas Goodeyre of Edgware had continued as clerk to the sheriffs of Middlesex for substantially more than one year. Goodeyre incurred a penalty of £600 for his misdemeanour, half of which went to the king and the other half to the informers.4

The use of royal servants in obtaining information on local conditions and opinions is well illustrated in the case of the marquis of Exeter, who was arrested in September 1531, having been forbidden to attend at court earlier in the summer.5 At the time the king's divorce proceedings against Katherine of Aragon were causing much discussion and speculation. It was rumoured that if Henry VIII married Anne Boleyn, his cousin Henry Courtenay, marquis

1. LP VIII, 81 (ii).
3. Ibid., pp.34-5, citing Hall Book I, p.309.
4. LP XII ii, 1009.
5. LP V, 340 and 416. The 'young Marquis' mentioned was initially stated to be Dorset, but this was corrected by the editors in LP XIII ii, pp.318 and 399.
of Exeter, would become king. Two of the king’s Chamber servants who were Cornishmen, Roger Becket, a gentleman usher, and John Worth, a sewer, were sent to Cornwall to make secret enquiries into the conduct and demeanour of William Kendall, the marquis’s servant mentioned earlier, who was considered largely responsible for spreading the rumour.\(^1\) The royal servants were instructed to appear to be merely visiting friends in the area, and carried letters from the king addressed to various gentlemen and to John Thomas, sergeant at arms. Thomas enjoyed the special confidence and trust of the king, being also a commissioner and assessor of the duchy of Cornwall, and he was to assist Becket and Worth in their investigations. These aimed to discover the number of servants Kendall kept in his house, what other servants he had, and whether he had lately retained any men in the county, their number and his intent for retaining. In addition the royal servants were to discover whether there was any rumour that the marquis should be heir apparent.\(^2\)

As a result of the investigations, it was found that the marquis was indeed regarded throughout the county as the heir apparent to the king. Statements made by various local persons about Kendall’s activities were recorded. These included the evidence of John Amadas, sergeant at arms, who had heard from another royal servant, John Cornish, as well as two other people, that Kendall retained many men for the marquis. John Lytle of the Guard testified that Kendall told him that the marquis had sent for men to the country, and that Mr. Lowre (a duchy officer) had sent him four, while Kendall himself would send a tall fellow and two more. Both Kendall and another servant of the marquis named Quintrell were reported as saying that if the king should marry ‘Lady Anne’ there would be ‘need of such good fellows’, and that their master must then be king.\(^3\) Kendall and Quintrell were arrested and taken to the Tower by John Thomas, sergeant at arms.\(^4\)

As shown in chapter 3, yeomen of the Guard were involved in apprehending suspected felons and keeping them in custody. In September 1538 William Fitzwilliam informed Thomas Cromwell that a harper of Havant had been arrested, and had implicated a surgeon named Richard Heyre as the source of a statement that Sir Geoffrey Pole would have sent over the sea to his brother if he had not been taken. The harper had been committed to ward, and Heyre was in the custody of Walter Russell of the Guard, who was also bailiff of Havant.\(^5\) Similarly,

---

3. LP XIII ii, 961; Blake, pp.364 and 368.
5. LP XIII ii, 393.
in April 1540 the mayor of Salisbury informed the earl of Southampton that, according to his command, a prisoner named John Aisshewood had been delivered to the custody of John Willesden and George Escotte, yeomen of the king's Guard.¹

A more serious case, involving a murder, was discovered in 1520, by Thomas Sounde of the Guard. Details eventually appeared in a Star Chamber petition by Giles Huncote, which recorded that a monk in Combermere abbey, Cheshire, was stabbed to death on 11 February 1520 by John Jenyns, a household servant of the abbot there.² The servant was protected by the prior at Combermere, who was anxious to keep the murder secret because, as he stated, 'this abbey is already in an evil name for using of misrule'.³ He therefore asked those who knew about the murder to keep quiet about it, getting them to swear an oath to conceal the matter. Six months or so later the crime came to the knowledge of Thomas Sounde, who arrested Jenyns and had him imprisoned in Chester gaol on suspicion of felony.⁴

Conclusion

The yeomen of the Guard were fully involved in helping to protect the interests of the monarch in their areas of activity. By the diligent exercise of their offices they collected the king's revenues, preserved his feudal rights, sought out tax evaders, and maintained his parks and forests. They upheld the law by reporting illegal practices and statements likely to cause unrest, as well as by apprehending suspected felons and guarding prisoners.

¹ LP XV, 446.
³ Williams, pp.201-2.
⁴ Ibid.
Chapter 6

Family and Social Status of Members of the Guard

This chapter is concerned with the individuals who served in the king's bodyguard, and examines their social background. The amount of information which it has been possible to find on individual yeomen varies considerably. In some cases a name occurs once or twice and no further details can be found, while in others a wealth of information has been discovered from different sources. The majority of the yeomen fall between these two extremes. Following examples of the means of entry to royal service through aristocratic households, a brief section discusses the social status of royal servants generally. The contrasting amount of information available on different yeomen is then demonstrated. This is followed by an account of the private activities in which some of the yeomen were engaged. The next section describes yeomen who were property owners, and an assessment follows on the financial position of individuals. This leads to a discussion of the yeomen's standing in the community, and their family connections. Examples are then given of a variety of events illustrating their personal lives, and the attitudes of other people towards the Guard. Next comes an indication of their geographical distribution throughout the country, and the chapter concludes with a description of memorials to some of the yeomen.

Recruitment by special recommendation

As shown in chapter 1, some of the earliest members of the Guard were chosen from Lancastrian supporters, many of whom had shared some part of Henry Tudor's exile, and others were recruited from aristocratic households. Among the latter were John Forde, a former servant of Giles, Lord Daubeney,¹ and Thomas Broke, who formerly served Edmund de la Pole, earl of Suffolk.² Later examples include James Gartside, who had been brought up in the earl of Derby's household,³ and Roger Ellis, who came to the court from the household of the marquess of Exeter.⁴ Appointments to the Guard were made upon personal recommendation. In January 1546 Sir Thomas Heneage submitted the name of Reynold Jones

². LP i i, 438 (1), m.12.
⁴. LP XIII ii, 755; PROB 11/28 (7 Alenger).
for the next vacancy in the Guard, and a year later the lord chamberlain and vice-chamberlain subscribed warrants for Richard Gibbs and John Auger to be appointed to the next vacancies to occur in the Guard. In some families royal service tended to continue in successive generations, in a variety of household offices. William and John Almer, yeomen of the Guard, were the sons of John Almer, marshal of the Hall to Henry VII. John Gilmin’s son John became an usher of the Chamber, and John Stanshaw’s son Robert was a groom of the Chamber. There are a number of instances where sons of the yeomen also joined the Guard. Among these were Andrew Greenhill’s son John and John Thomas’s son Robert.

Status of royal servants

Servants of the royal household were accorded a higher social status than those performing similar functions elsewhere, and ranked higher than the description of their offices might suggest. Service to the king or other members of the royal family bestowed an added status to an individual’s position in his local community. Robert Washington and Nicholas Downes were described in a recognizance of February 1504 as ‘gentlemen of the king’s household’, and Edward Ingham appears in the Westminster rental of the Abbey sacrist of c.1530 as ‘gentleman and yeoman of the king’s Guard’. These instances compare with the standing of royal servants in pre-Tudor times. Rosemary Horrox has indicated that yeomen of the crown and grooms of the Chamber in Richard III’s reign came from a wide social range, and cites the description of William Parker, Edward IV’s yeoman of the scullery, as a gentleman of the household. A distinction in rank existed between the various yeomen within the royal household, however, depending upon the department where they held office. While yeomen of the crown carried out special domestic duties in the domus magnificencie, those yeomen holding offices in a department belonging to the domus providencie were never described as yeomen of the crown.

---

1. SP 4/1, 83; LP XX ii, 1067.
2. LP XX ii, 770.
3. Campbell, ii, p.522; Bindoff, i, p.313.
4. LP IV i, 464 (27).
5. LP I i, 2617 (29); PROB 11/16 (19 Holder).
6. LP X, 392 (27); LP XV, 436 (4); PROB 11/32 (41 Populwell).
7. LP II i, 1543; LP III ii, 2862 (12).
Diversity of information on yeomen's backgrounds and careers

In many cases little is known about an individual beyond the inclusion of his name on a list or a reference to him as a particular office holder. Among these yeomen is John Frye, who was appointed searcher in the port of Bristol on 24 September 1485, receiving a saving of the office in the Act of Resumption.\(^1\) He appears in the 1496 warrant to the keeper of the Great Wardrobe listing Chamber personnel authorized to receive livery of cloth for watching clothing,\(^2\) but is heard of no more. Robert Bagger, who took part in Henry VII's 'victorious journey' to Bosworth in 1485, and received the offices of bailiff, porter and park-keeper of Maxstoke, Warwickshire, on 24 September that year,\(^3\) may have been the tax collector of that name in Eccleshall, Staffordshire, in 1489,\(^4\) otherwise no other evidence of his activities has been discovered.

At the other extreme is Roger Hacheman, who appears in the Wardrobe warrants listing Chamber personnel in November 1509\(^5\) and December 1510.\(^6\) Hacheman was the recipient of many grants between 1511 and 1549/50. In November 1511 he received the grant, in fee, of a property called Sircotes, alias Sithcotes lands, in the lordship of Hartwell, Buckinghamshire, arising from the attainder of Sir Richard Empson.\(^7\) While serving in the garrison at Tournai, Hacheman was appointed to the office of 'seal royal' there on 15 July 1515, back-dated to 21 September 1513, the date of Henry VIII's entry to the city.\(^8\) [See chapter 4 for more details.] In April 1522 Hacheman was granted a 21-years' lease of a dwelling and lands called 'Bekesplace' in the lordship of Ewelme, Oxfordshire, lately belonging to Edmund de la Pole, at a rent of £4, with 2s. increase.\(^9\) He received a grant of the ferry, fishery and boats at Shillingford ferry, between the counties of Oxford and Berkshire, in the honour of Wallingford, on 21 June 1529.\(^10\)

Two years later, in October 1531, he received a further grant of the fishery in the river Thames at Shellingford, with the ditches and creeks there called 'Huddesbut' and meadows adjoining, together with three acres of meadow in Woodford, formerly held by the priory of Wallingford, of the annual value of 40s. 4d; and the office of keeper of the great wood known as 'le priory wood'.\(^11\) On 23 March 1536 Hacheman was granted the annual rent of 48s. from certain lands

---

1. C82/2 (3), m.393; Campbell, i, pp.7 and 30; Rot. Parl., vi, p.363.
2. E101/414/8, f.53.
3. C82/2 (3), m.364; Campbell, i, pp.45-6.
6. Ibid., f.57.
7. LP I, 1985; LP I i, 969 (56).
8. LP II i, 714; Cruickshank, Tournai, pp.8 (which shows 23 September), 51 and 189.
9. LP III ii, 2214 (10).
10. LP IV iii, 5748 (21).
11. LP V, 506 (8).
near Chalgrove, Oxford, formerly belonging to Wallingford priory. He was described as Roger Hacheman of Ewelme when he received the leases, in 1536-7, of two water mills known as Overly Mills and the rectories of Nettlebed and Overey, Oxon., formerly belonging to Dorchester monastery. During the same period he was appointed bailiff of the lands late of Dorchester monastery and keeper of the woods of Dorchester at Rewley and Goring. A lease in 1537-8 gave him further lands in the lordship of Ewelme, formerly belonging to Edmund de la Pole. Finally, in 1549 or 1550 Hacheman obtained the lease of Bishop's Court Farm, at an annual rent of £14.13s.

Further details of individual yeomen are shown in Appendix F. The selection of yeomen was made chiefly, but not exclusively, from those whose names appear in the records most frequently, or about whom the most information could be found. Restrictions of space prevent the inclusion of further biographical notes which had been prepared.

The yeomen as business men and property owners

Many of the yeomen were engaged in private business outside the court, in occupations such as tradesman, merchant, seaman or farmer. Oliver Turner was a vintner of London, and John Matthew a citizen and baker of London. John Lorkyn of St. Clement Danes, London, and John Rudgewey of Exminster, Devon, were butchers, William Hunt of Coventry was a weaver or clothmaker, and John Ayer was a co-partner of Stertmore tinworks in Devon. Innholders included Robert Talbot of Ely, Cambridge, and Ipswich and Halley, Suffolk, and Thomas Boleyn of Bishop's Lynn and Boston. Those who were merchants included George Geffron of Ottery St. Mary, Devon, and Adam Sampson of Kent, the latter trading in timber. Early in 1513 Sampson received 21s. 1d. for wood which he supplied for use in the royal ship the Sovereign, and in October 1520 the abbot of Lesnes monastery, Kent, indented

1. LP X, 597 (45).
5. Ibid., p.589, citing Augm. Book 210, f.32.
7. LP I i, 438 (3), m.4.
9. LP III ii, 2749 (12); LP X, 597 (16).
10. LP I i, 438 (3), m.10.
11. STAC 2/2/274. I am grateful to Mr. Philip Ward for this reference.
12. LP I i, 438 (3), m.11.
13. Ibid., m.12.
15. SP 2/G, f.211v. I am grateful to Mr. Philip Ward for this reference.
16. E36/12, p.141.
to sell a quantity of wood to Sampson. Richard Berkeley of Rye, Sussex, was both a merchant and a seaman. These two occupations were often combined, since merchants who owned ships tended to serve on them as captain or master. Among those already mentioned in chapter 4, John Ismay, Thomas Spert and William Sabyn were initially ship-owning merchants.

Some members of the Guard were wealthy householders and farmers. Among the yeomen who came from families which had been established as land-owners for several generations were Henry Birde and Thomas Cocke. Henry Birde's grandfather, Philip Birde of Eltham, Kent, left by his will of 19 September 1497 three tenements in Eltham as well as lands and farms in Kent. The lands and farms were equally divided between his two sons, Robert and Thomas. Henry Birde was one of the three sons of the latter, and shared equally with his two brothers the lands and tenements bequeathed by their father. Henry Birde's own will of 26 June 1544, proved on 31 March 1545, shows that he left a house and land in Lewisham, where he had lived, tenements in Greenwich, and lands in Eltham. The annual net value of his properties was shown in his will as £11. 1s. 8d. Thomas Cocke was the second of the four sons of John Cocke of Prittlewell, Essex. Thomas was a substantial property owner in Essex, as his will of 21 July 1544, proved on 7 February 1545, reveals. Besides houses and shops in Prittlewell, Cocke owned houses, woods, crofts and pieces of land in the parish, and his farm known as Reynolds, which extended to 60 acres of arable and pasture. In addition, he held the lease of a farm called Shelford and Bredworth in Foulness, well stocked with sheep and oxen, and lands in Little Wakering, leased from the master and brethren of St. Bartholomew's hospital, Smithfield, London, in December 1529 for 99 years. These lands may have included the 'oyster layings' at Little Wakering, mentioned as Cocke's property in his will.

Other property owners among the Guard included John West, Henry Skillman, and John Griffiths. In January 1501 John West sold property which had belonged to his father, Robert West, to Walter Cromwell, beer brewer and father of Thomas Cromwell, Henry VIII's future chief minister. This included sixteen acres of arable land in Wandsworth, and one acre in the 'Northfeld', Wandsworth, as well as a dwelling, a garden and a wood. In 1526 Henry

1. SP 2/G, f.211v.
2. LP I i, 438 (1), m.4.
4. PROB 11/31 (6 Alen).
8. CCR Henry VII, ii, 57.
Skillman bequeathed to his wife Eleanor the house in which they lived, together with lands, pastures, meadows and woodlands within the parish of Eltham. John Griffiths of Eystanes ad Montem, Essex, was able to purchase from Lord Audley in 1539 ‘The Saracen’s Head’ in Aldgate, as well as buildings and grounds in the parish of St. Catherine Christchurch, London, at a cost of £67. 0s.10d.

Several yeomen of the Guard were among those who enclosed land in Buckinghamshire, Oxfordshire and Warwickshire. An enquiry took place in 1517 and 1518 into lands which had been enclosed since Michaelmas 1488. This revealed that in Buckinghamshire Thomas Greenway had enclosed 30 acres of land in Upton and 40 acres in Great Kimble, and in Oxfordshire Thomas Broke had enclosed 200 acres at ‘Newnham’, probably Newnham Murren, the next parish to Ewelme, where he held offices as parker, bailiff and woodward. In Warwickshire, Baldwin Heath had enclosed 24 acres of land in Wootton, and William Brown was found to have enclosed 192 acres at Brailes, where he was bailiff, which involved putting four ploughs out of action, destroying two dwellings and evicting 16 people.

In some instances yeomen of the Guard held land given to them by the sovereign, and many received grants of property on varying terms. By his will of 20 June 1517, proved on 15 November 1521, John Geffron bequeathed to his brother George lands and tenements in Canterbury, Kent, which he stated had been given to him by Henry VIII. Henry Birde was granted lands by the king in October 1542, as a reward for services. These lands, in the parishes of Lewisham and Lee, Kent, consisted of Little Bankers (about three acres), Great Hatchfield (about 33 acres), one acre called Bridgehouse land, and a close of eight acres called Great Wotty, with an annual rent of 50s. The annual net value of the house and land in Lewisham which he had ‘of the king’s majesty’s gift’ was shown as £3. 6s. 8d. in his will of 26 June 1544, proved on 31 March 1545.

In September 1501 William Maddockes was granted ‘certain lands with gardens’ in the parish of St. Giles without Cripplegate, London, forfeited by Humphrey Stafford. A further

1. Kent County Record Office, Maidstone, DRb/PWR.8, f.60. I am grateful to Mr. D. W. Skillman for sending me a copy of this will.
2. LP XIV i, 220.
4. Ibid., pp.189 and 205.
5. Ibid., p.364.
7. Leadam, ii, pp.451 and 651.
8. Ibid., pp.419, 649 and 654n.
10. Drake, p.248, citing Pat. 34 Henry VIII, p.7; LP XVII, 1012 (54).
11. PROB 11/31 (6 Alen).

*probably Easton patent in May 1502 specified the messuages and gardens in Whitecross Street and Redcross Street, not exceeding the value of seven marks, to be held at a rent of one red rose annually at Midsummer, with an additional grant of the income from the properties since 21 January 1493. In February 1511 John Grey, together with a yeoman of the queen's Chamber, Thomas Wodrofe, received the grant of a house at the corner of Bow Lane in the parish of St. Michael Paternoster, at Dovegate, London, and three tenements in Cussyn Lane, in the parish of Allhallows the More, forfeited by the attainder of Sir Richard Charleton. John Vaughan and Richard Rayneshawe were each granted a 30-years' lease in 1530, arising from the dissolution of the monastery of St. Mary de Pratis, Hertfordshire. Vaughan's lease was for the manor called Beaumonds, at an annual rent of 4 marks (53s. 4d.), and Rayneshawe's lease covered the manor of Pratis and six messuages, two cottages, 100 acres of land and 100 acres of wood in Pratis, with the fair there, at an annual rent of £7. Following the large-scale dissolution of the monasteries a few years later, many of the Guard were among the royal servants who benefited from the king’s generosity with his new-found wealth. In February 1538 Richard Gilmin was granted the lands of a farm called Landshott in Horley and Horne, Surrey, formerly belonging to Merton priory. Lancelot Harrison was leased the site of Jervaulx monastery, Yorkshire, with various parts of its demesne lands, in February 1539, for a term of 21 years. The annual rent was initially set at £12, but this was evidently found to be grossly undervalued, as a patent of 17 May 1539 granted a similar lease to Harrison at a rent of £23. 8s.
0d., on surrender of the earlier patent.

Financial standing of the yeomen

The financial standing of the individual yeomen can also be seen in the records of assessments made for the subsidy for the wars, in 1524-5 and the 1540s. At the time of the 1524-5 subsidy John Flamank was assessed on land worth £20 in the parish of Bodmin, Cornwall, and George Geffron was initially assessed on goods of £100 at Ottery St. Mary, Devon. In 1525, however, Geffron was allowed a reduction of £26.13s. 4d., being the amount of a loan which 'to the assessors' knowledge' he never recovered. At this time John Amadas

1. CPR Henry VII, ii, pp.269 and 271.
2. LP I, 1508.
3. LP IV iii, 6542 (11).
4. Ibid., 6363 (4).
6. LP XIV i, 403 (42).
7. Ibid., 1056 (37).
8. Stoate, Cornwall, p.92.
10. Ibid., p.28.
was assessed on land worth £13. 6s. 8d. in Tavistock, Devon,\(^1\) but by the time of the 1543 subsidy his assessment on land had risen to £40.\(^2\) Several of the surviving documents showing the assessments for subsidies made on members of the royal household contain incomplete lists of the Guard. The one for 1542-3 includes only 67 yeomen,\(^3\) but among these were Henry Birde and Thomas Cocke, mentioned earlier. This shows that both were assessed on goods, the former on £24 and liable to pay 24s, the latter on £26, to pay 26s. Both died early in 1545 so do not appear in subsequent assessments. The assessment for the royal household for 1546 includes a full list of yeomen of the Guard.\(^4\) The rates of assessment were at a monthly contribution, spread over the five months June to October 1546, of 2d. in the pound for goods worth from £15 upwards, and 4d. in the pound for income from lands and fees of £2 and above. Sixteen yeomen ushers and 112 yeomen are listed, making a total of 128 yeomen of the Guard. Of these, 93 were assessed on wages only, 19 on wages and lands, 8 on wages and fees or annuities, 5 on goods, and 3 on wages, lands and fees. Those who were assessed on wages only, of £18 per annum (despite the fact that their wages in 1545 were shown as £24 p.a. - see chapter 2), paid a total of 30s., at the rate of 6s. per month. Of the others, John Piers, clerk of the cheque, and Thomas Johnson were each assessed on goods of £100, paying a total contribution of £4. 3s. 4d., at 16s. 8d. per month, John Lane paid a total of £2.10s. on goods worth £60, at 10s. per month, and George Gates and Robert Owen each paid £1.13s. 4d. on goods of £40 at 6s. 8d. per month. John Holland was assessed on wages and lands valued at £45, paying a total of £3.15s. 0d. at 15s. per month. Hugh Proffett, Thomas Timewell, Thomas Okey and Christopher Lonsdale paid £2.10s. on wages and lands of £30, at 10s. a month, and John Willoughby, assessed on wages, lands and annuities of £30, paid £2.15s., at 11s. per month.

The proportion of yeomen assessed on wages only in 1546 is very high compared with the yeomen of former years, many of whom received other fees. This may have been partly due to the change in personnel during 1545, shown in chapter 2, when 14 yeomen were discharged and 15 appointed, the newer members having received no grants of office bearing fees at that stage. A check made on those yeomen listed in the Wardrobe warrants of Chamber personnel for 1496 and 1512\(^5\) indicates that the proportion holding other offices, or receiving fees or other monetary rewards, was respectively 66 and 61 per cent, whereas the proportion for 1546

\(^{1}\) Ibid., p.152.
\(^{3}\) E179/69/38.
\(^{4}\) E179/69/56.
\(^{5}\) E101/414/8, f.53; E101/417/6, f.54.
appears to be only 27 per cent. Nevertheless, it has been estimated that assessments for early Tudor subsidies did not reflect the true position of a person’s financial state, and it is likely that royal servants knew how to ensure that they were not unfavourably taxed. There may be some evidence of this in the details given for certain yeomen in the 1546 list who appear in another for 1545-6,¹ where higher assessments were made, with two exceptions, as shown in Table 7.

Table 7: Showing differing rates for certain yeomen on two assessment lists for the subsidy in the royal household

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Assessment on wages</th>
<th>Amount due</th>
<th>Assessment on:</th>
<th>Amount due</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1545/6</td>
<td></td>
<td>1546</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thomas Boyse et al.</td>
<td>18 35s.</td>
<td>wages</td>
<td>18 30s.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Assessment on land</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thomas Timewell</td>
<td>31 62s.</td>
<td>wages &amp; land</td>
<td>30 50s.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thomas Medgate</td>
<td>20 40s.</td>
<td>wages &amp; land</td>
<td>18 30s.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hugh Proffett</td>
<td>30 6s. 8d.</td>
<td>wages &amp; land</td>
<td>30 50s.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Northcott</td>
<td>21 42s.</td>
<td>wages &amp; fees</td>
<td>21 35s.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Richard Wilson</td>
<td>28 36s.</td>
<td>wages &amp; land</td>
<td>28 46s. 8d.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Richard Jacke</td>
<td>20 40s.</td>
<td>wages</td>
<td>18 30s.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Robert David</td>
<td>22 44s.</td>
<td>wages</td>
<td>18 30s.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chris. Lonsdale</td>
<td>23 46s.</td>
<td>wages &amp; land</td>
<td>30 50s.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Assessment on goods</th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>John Lane</td>
<td>60 80s.</td>
<td>goods</td>
<td>60 50s.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Richard Williams</td>
<td>30 40s.</td>
<td>wages</td>
<td>18 30s.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Bostock</td>
<td>30 40s.</td>
<td>wages</td>
<td>18 30s.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Sources: 1545/6: E179/69/50; 1546: E179/69/56

Despite the lower figures which were evidently adopted, some yeomen appear to have had difficulty in paying all of their instalments by the required time. Of those assessed on wages and lands, Hugh Proffett owed 10s. of the 50s. due and John Baugh owed 7s. of the 35s. due, while of those assessed on wages only, Edward Lawes (one of the newest recruits to the Guard) owed the whole amount of 30s. and Thomas Snow, William Winchester and John Glynne each owed 5s.²

1. E179/69/50.
2. E179/69/45.
The family backgrounds of the yeomen

The families of several yeomen can be found among the published collections of county pedigrees based on heralds' visitations, and some of these families were armigerous. Among the latter were the families of John Amadas (arms described as azure, a chevron ermine between three oaken slips acorned, proper),¹ Lawrence Eglisfeld (arms described as or, three eagles displayed gules),² Thomas Greenway (arms described as gules a fess and a chief or with three martlets vert in the chief),³ and Thomas Noke (on a fess sable between three leopards' heads, a bow between two coronets, 'over them a helmet with a crest of a lion's paw erased and erected, encircled by a coronet and grasping an arrow').⁴ Other yeomen who feature in known pedigrees include Henry Birde,⁵ David Cecili,⁶ Thomas Cocke,⁷ John and Bartholomew Flamank or Flammoke,⁸ and Roger Temple.⁹ Relationships through marriage may also be seen in similar sources. Lewis ap Watkin married Isabel, one of the three daughters and co-heiresses of Sir Edmund Tame;¹⁰ John Flamank's wife was Joyce, daughter of Sir Richard Nanfan;¹¹ and Roger Becke was married to Mabel, second daughter of Sir Lawrence Warren of Pointon, baron of Stockport, by his wife Margaret, daughter of Sir Piers Legh of Lyme, Cheshire.¹² Through a marriage two generations previously, the Warren family was related to the Stanley family.¹³

In several other cases the name of a yeoman's father is recorded. Among these are Thomas Boys of Calais and Walmer, who was the third son of John Boys of Kent,¹⁴ and Roger

9. BL Additional Ms. 5524, f.161v.
10. LP XXI i, 1166 (67).
Porter of Wallespole in Powesland, North Wales, and Westminster, son of Hugh Porter.\textsuperscript{1} William Morice’s father, James Morice of Roydon, Essex, served as master of the works to Henry VII’s mother, Margaret, countess of Richmond and Derby, before becoming a gentleman usher in the royal household.\textsuperscript{2}

Many of the yeomen showed benevolence towards poor people, particularly in their wills, where this was a customary gesture for good Christians to make, for the good of their souls. Cornelius van Dun was wealthy enough to show this benevolence during his lifetime, as well as after, founding almshouses at the west end of Petty France and at St. Ermin’s Hill, Westminster.\textsuperscript{3} The latter may have been the 20 houses which he had built in Westminster at his own cost for poor widows.\textsuperscript{4} Thomas Cocke, by his will of 21 July 1544, provided for three bushels of wheat to be baked and made into penny loaves and for a bullock to be killed and distributed to poor people annually at Christmas eve.\textsuperscript{5} Robert Delwood directed in his will of 12 September 1538, proved in June 1540, that £10 be distributed among his poor neighbours living in Abingdon at the time of his burial, and £6 both at his ‘month’s mind’ and at the anniversary of his death.\textsuperscript{6}

Public service and the importance of status

Since a number of the yeomen of the Guard were of some substance, their standing in the community, enhanced by royal service, led to their election as mayors and Members of Parliament. John Stanshaw represented Reading in Parliament in 1497,\textsuperscript{7} Henry Strete sat for Plymouth in 1510,\textsuperscript{8} and John Flamank was elected as member for Bodmin in 1512 and 1515.\textsuperscript{9} David Cecil served as mayor of Stamford (though the traditional title there was alderman) in 1504-5, 1515-16 and 1526-7, and as Member of Parliament for Stamford in 1504, 1510, 1512, 1515 and 1523.\textsuperscript{10} Richard Berkeley was MP for Winchelsea in 1495 and 1497-8, and mayor there in 1497-9; he represented Rye in Parliament in 1504 and 1510, becoming mayor there in 1503-4.\textsuperscript{11} These elections to Parliament did not create a precedent, since yeomen of the crown in former

1. LP I i, 438 (4), m.18.
6. PROB 11/28 (7 Aelenger).
8. Bindoff, iii, p.399.
reigns served in the same way. Nicholas Buckley was MP for Bodmin in 1449 and for Lostwithiel in 1453-4,\(^1\) and John Boston represented Bedford in 1467-8 and 1472-5.\(^2\)

The importance an individual attached to his standing in his community is illustrated by an incident concerning the election of a new abbot at Muchelney abbey in 1532. Henry Thornton (by that time a sergeant at arms) was a fairly wealthy and influential man in Somerset, having represented Bridgwater in Parliament in 1529, and he enlisted Thomas Cromwell’s support to secure the election of his nominee for the post, to which there had been strong local opposition.\(^3\) Thornton’s letters to Cromwell clearly indicate his fear that his status in the county was threatened. Although Thornton’s nominee was eventually successful, the new abbot had to pay a large sum of money for his position.\(^4\) David Cecil (also a sergeant at arms), towards the end of his life, had occasion to complain to Cromwell about a suit which one Merynge brought against him regarding an obligation at Nottingham which was fictitious. Although the sum involved was only 20 marks, his defence had cost him £20. His letter to Cromwell of 8 April 1534 referred to his long service to two kings, and continued ‘I desire you somewhat to ponder my truth and poor honesty, for it was never disdained in the king’s father’s days, when I was some time put in trust, nor yet in this king’s time till now.’\(^5\)

Personal petitions and lawsuits

There are many instances where the yeomen petitioned the king on various personal matters, from seeking the payment of overdue wages, to appealing to him as their ‘good lord’ for assistance in lawsuits, whether concerning property or financial matters, coercion by magnates or in cases of murder. Richard Pigot petitioned Henry VII in March 1486 for his wages of 4d. a day as keeper of Portnall park, within the precincts of Windsor castle. He was unable to obtain payment from the Exchequer because ‘the office was not ancient’ according to the limitation of a statute of Edward III and Richard II.\(^6\) Humphrey Acton’s petition relates that, on the king’s commandment, he had returned to court on 1 July 1518, after duty in the garrison at Tournai, but remained unpaid a year later, because his correct name was not presented in the bill for certain of his company to receive 4d. a day.\(^7\)

---

1. Ibid., p.129.
2. Ibid., p.94.
4. Ibid.
7. E101/418/17, m.21.
Petitions for lawsuits were usually addressed to the king or his chancellor. Bills of complaint have survived in greater number than the subsequent answers and further proceedings of many such cases, so that the final outcome is often unknown. At an unknown date between 1504 and 1515, when William Warham was chancellor of England, John Sandford and his wife Maud sought the good lordship of the chancellor in granting a writ of subpoena on one Thomas A Warton, commanding him to appear before the king in Chancery regarding a debt, for which no remedy could be found by the common law. The debt concerned a sum of £4 owing to Maud's former husband, Richard Warkop, deceased, which was due to Maud as his executrix. At the request of Thomas A Warton, Warkop had agreed to board two married women, who were in his keeping for a quarter of a year. Although A Warton had promised to guarantee the costs involved, it had not been possible to recover these from him. During the same period, when Warham was chancellor, Baldwin Heath pleaded for assistance on a property matter. Although he had lawfully bought and paid for two dwellings and land in Castle Bromwich, Warwickshire, the vendor, Thomas Bradwall alias Watson, had detained the deeds. In 1536 John Catcot of Batcombe, Somerset, petitioned the king in Star Chamber, seeking a remedy for damage to his hedges and dykes caused by a riotous group of twenty people during the night of 24 February that year, on the three acres of enclosed land in Batcombe which Catcot had held by copyhold for 12 years of the earl of Arundel's manor of Spargrove. Catcot complained that he was unable to get possession of the land to carry out repairs. This may have been one of the cases typical of the time, where the allegation of a riotous act was requisite for a case to be brought before the Star Chamber, as a matter of form rather than of fact.

Complaints were sometimes made to the king by members of the Guard who had suffered at the hands of their local magnates. Two examples show the very different outcome which resulted in such instances. Griffith Mores reported the behaviour of Sir William Griffith, chamberlain of North Wales, who had sent a subpoena for Mores to appear at the exchequer in Carnarvon on a certain day. Mores duly arrived, to find the exchequer was closed,

2. Cl 358/78. I am grateful to Miss K. Lacey for this reference.
3. Cl 323/30.
whereupon he went to see the chamberlain's deputy to learn the nature of any charge against him. The deputy commanded him not to depart from Carnarvon, on forfeit of £40, so Mores stayed there at some expense for nearly three weeks before the chamberlain arrived. Mores complained that Sir William reviled and rebuked him shamefully, before letting him go without charge. He requested that, since Sir William was then in London, he should be sent for to appear before the king's council to answer for his behaviour and to show what just cause he had against Mores. The bill of complaint mentions the great extortions and oppressions for which the chamberlain was notorious in the three shires of North Wales, resulting in great impoverishment of the king's subjects there. A further point was made concerning the retainers which Sir William had appointed, numbering 500 and more, whereby the inhabitants had no remedy of the law, since in any disputes some of the retainers were impanelled, following 'only the mind of the said Sir William and not the truth of the matter'.

There was evidently some long-standing enmity between the chamberlain and Mores, which was revealed when Sir William was called upon to explain charges of high-handedness.
He pointed out that the great difficulty of governing North Wales needed firm control, and alleged that the charges against him were contrived by Mores. The chamberlain explained his refusal to grant a particular farm to Mores, though pressed 'at the desire of other of the king's grace most honorable Guard his fellows', because he wanted to prevent the yeoman's brother-in-law from using it as a base for his gang of eighteen outlaws. Sir William's enemies, on the other hand, claimed that he victimised Mores because he had 'bare witness with Doctor Glynne [archdeacon of Bangor] against the chamberlain about a benefice'. Despite strong evidence against him regarding not only his abuse of power but his illegal retinue, the council which met on 6 June 1519, recognising that the chamberlain's powerful control was indispensable, merely placed restraints on Sir William. The unfortunate Griffith Mores, as chief plaintiff against him, was committed to the Fleet, for falsely accusing the chamberlain.

A similar case was brought to the Court of Requests by Elis Decka, who lamented the extortion and great power of Sir John Shilston, under-steward of the lordship of Bromfield in the marches of Wales. During Decka's absence in Ireland when he was serving the king in the earl of Surrey's retinue, both his sister and her husband, David ap Griffith ap Robert, had died, leaving two young sons, who were heirs to their father's lands. According to the law and

1. Ibid.
2. Ibid.
3. REQ 2/12/154. I am grateful to Dr. Gunn also for this reference; and see his above-mentioned article, pp.484-5.
custom of the lordship, in such cases the nearest in blood who was not an inheritor of the land should have the custody of the heirs and the lands until the heirs reached full age. Shilston had ordered that the lands should be in the hands of certain of the children's uncles, but that Decka's mother should be responsible for the expense of looking after the children, without any revenue from the lands. Decka had complained about the matter to the king's commissioners in Shrewsbury, and it had been decreed that Decka, as the nearest in blood, should have the custody of the children and lands until the heir came to full age. 1 The commissioners had informed Shilston that Decka should be recompensed for the time when the other uncles wrongfully received the revenue, but there seemed to be difficulty in enforcing this ruling. Decka was fortunate, however, as he was able to see the king at Hertford, and this resulted in a directive signed by Henry VIII which Shilston could not ignore. Nevertheless, further prompting was necessary, through the influence of Sir Thomas More, before Decka succeeded in his suit. 2

Although the outcome of some cases cannot be traced, a number of instances are known where yeomen were pardoned for murder. These were probably cases where fatal injury was deemed to have been inflicted in self-defence, as happened to Edmund Stoner, who had been committed to the Marshalsea prison. 3 Sir Walter Stoner explained the circumstances in a letter to Cromwell dated 9 September 1535, begging him to be ‘favourable to his brother Edmund’, who had evidently been attacked by one of Sir Walter’s servants and had struck him on the head in trying to defend himself. The servant had died from his injury eleven days later. 4 The pardon for murder was received in due course, in July 1536. 5 Two other instances may be cited: Anthony Saunders of Southwick, Hampshire, alias of London, was pardoned for murder in 1523 6 and John Sandford of Appleby, Westmorland, received a pardon in August 1529 for the slaughter of Henry Salkeld. 7 The latter case indicates that a long-standing feud between the Sandford and Salkeld families still continued. 8

As already shown, the yeomen were not always exonerated from punitive measures for offences. Perhaps the most serious and unpardonable crime was the shedding of blood within the court. Early in 1512, during the session of Parliament, a yeoman of the Guard named

1. Ibid.
2. Ibid.
3. LP XI, 202 (25).
4. LP IX, 317.
5. LP XI, 202 (25).
6. LP III ii, 2994 (28).
7. LP IV iii, 5906 (4).
Richard Newbold (or Newbolt) wilfully killed one of Lord Willoughby's servants in Westminster palace. Hall records that, although in the king's great favour and a special archer, Newbold was hanged, in the palace, where his body was left for two days as an example to others.1

It was perhaps inevitable that among several hundred men over the two reigns, a few of the yeomen were involved in scandals of some sort. On 9 January 1500 Peter Lloyd entered into a bond in £100 with Sir Giles Daubeney and Sir Charles Somerset. The condition was stated that 'if Peter pay Margery Floyd [sic] alias Foster at the White Hart Inn, Southwark, 46s. 8d each year, i.e. 26s. 8d. at the Annunciation and 20s. at Easter, until he shall have obtained a lawful divorce from her by the church, this recognizance shall be voided'.2 Two years later they were apparently still legally married, since on 25 January 1502 Thomas Benne of London, sherman, and Elizabeth his wife acknowledged receipt from William Warham, bishop of London, of 10 marks delivered to the bishop by Elizabeth's mother, Margery Lloyd, wife of Peter Lloyd, yeoman of the crown, for her marriage portion.3

In a case brought before Henry VII's council by Geoffrey Ellis, vicar of Thatcham, Berkshire, John Stanshaw was accused of attacking the vicar in his church on Sunday, 5 February 1503.4 An unusually full account of the case can be constructed from the evidence recorded at the time, probably because of the status of the accused. The cause of the scene arose from the fact that Stanshaw had left his wife and had lived in adultery for some years with a woman known as Joan Stanshaw. The bishop of Salisbury heard of this and ordered them to appear before him at his manor of Ramsbury. The vicar of Thatcham read the citation at the morning service in the presence of Joan Stanshaw, who threatened that the priests would repent the matter before night came. That afternoon Stanshaw entered the church accompanied by 16 riotous persons, armed with weapons, while evensong was taking place. Stanshaw with his son and a servant went into the chancel while the rest of his followers remained in the nave. The vicar was alarmed by his threatening demeanour and asked him what he meant. Stanshaw's reply was to ask whether the priest was not content that he was there, as he threw off his cloak and took his sword and buckler from his servant. His other servants then came into the chancel and would apparently have murdered the vicar if the latter's own servants had not rescued him. In his defence, Stanshaw declared that he had gone

2. CCR Henry VII, i, 1214.
3. Ibid., ii, 180.
to church peaceably for evensong and that after sitting in his seat in the chancel the vicar shut the chancel door and called a number of servants, intending to attack him, so that his own servants then pressed in to protect him. It is clear from the evidence, however, that Stanshaw was the aggressor. He rarely attended evensong and had earlier in the day announced his intention of going to the church and making a ‘fray’. The outcome of the case has not been found.

The Guard as seen by others

The Guard was evidently perceived as a significant part of the royal affinity, not only by those in authority or of a high rank, but by people seeking the king’s patronage. Sir Richard Empson was accused of using some members of the Guard in ‘an unwarranted act of force’ against Sir Robert Plumpton in 1501. This concerned a property dispute in which Empson used a jury with vested interests in an attempt (initially successful) to eject Plumpton from his patrimonial inheritance in Yorkshire. Among the 200 persons Empson assembled at the York assizes were ‘divers of the Guard of our sovereign lord the king arrayed in the most honourable livery of his said Guard’. As already indicated, the duke of Buckingham’s generosity towards members of the Guard rebounded on him. At his indictment in May 1521 at the Guildhall, London, it was alleged that he tried to win the favour of the king’s Guard by giving them presents of silks and cloth of gold and silver, as well as appointing them to offices in his lands for the purpose of retaining men. The confession and deposition of the duke’s chancellor, Robert Gilbert, included the statement that the duke had ‘always endeavoured to gain the favour of the king’s Guard and has often rejoiced to think of himself sure of it.’
Further, the deposition referred to officers recently appointed on the duke’s lands for purposes of retaining, allegedly to assist the duke in his treasons. In the accounts of the officers of the duke’s lands, made by the king’s commissioners in July to November 1523, Ralph Warbleton, described as yeoman of the crown, is shown as keeper of the North Park in Holderness, and Nicholas Clerke, similarly described, appears as bailiff of Fobbing, Essex.

Dr. John London reported to Cromwell on 8 July 1538 on the actions taken according to the king’s commission ‘at all the places of the friars in Oxford’. He stated that ‘it is rumoured

1. Ibid., pp.cxliii-cxliv.
3. Ibid., p.cxii.
4. LP III i, 1284/ii, p.491 and 1284/2 (6), p.493. BL Harley Ms. 283, f.72; HMC, Third Annual Report of the
6. LP III ii, 3695, pp.1531-2.
7. LP XIII i, 1342.
that divers of the Guard intend to beg these houses of the king, and this moves me to petition you for my neighbours. We have, in Oxford, the king's servants Mr. Banaster and Mr. Pye, who have nothing but 4d. a day of the king.' Both men had served as mayor of Oxford, and Dr. London suggested that it would be charitable to obtain the site and profits of the White Friars for Banaster and the site and profits of the fair of the Austin Friars for Pye.¹

On 11 August 1538 Henry Broke wrote to Cromwell informing him that the prior and convent of the friar's house of Newcastle-under-Lyne had freely surrendered it to the king's commissioner, the bishop of Dover.² Broke mentioned that he had land adjoining and had taken three leases of the prior and convent a few months earlier, which he hoped would be confirmed. As the bishop had told him he had no power to confirm these leases, he asked for Cromwell's help, promising him £30 if he could get the king's gift of it and all the goods now left, including the lead upon the high chancel and part of the cloister, two bells, glass, stone and iron. Broke concluded his letter with the statement that he 'hears that one Bothe, of London, and John Smith of the Guard will make suit for it'.³ The bishop of Dover also sent a communication to Cromwell, dated 27 August 1538, saying that since departing from him he had received to the king's use twenty-eight monasteries. He continued that several of the king's servants had begged him to write for them and offered 20 nobles or more, but that he would take none, concluding with the information that John Turner of the Guard, of Ludlow, was one of them.⁴

These references to the Guard seem to indicate that at least some contemporaries feared that the yeomen would be unduly favoured by the king. Apart from the great number of grants received by the yeomen following the dissolution of the monasteries, already referred to, perhaps the most significant indication of the reality of this view lies in the draft of Henry VIII's will. The draft provided for a legacy of £20 to each yeoman of the Guard upon the king's death. This legacy clause was one of several cancelled later, but probably not by the king himself, as he never actually signed the will.⁵ According to the few personal servants around him during the final days of his life, Henry VIII gave certain oral directions regarding the contents of his will, when alterations were made on his behalf and the dry stamp of the king's

---

1. Ibid.
2. LP XIII ii, 75.
3. Ibid.
4. Ibid., 200.
5. LP XXI ii, 634 (10).
signature was affixed.\textsuperscript{1} The fact that the clause was originally included in the king’s draft will, however, suggests that he held the Guard in special favour.

Geographical distribution of the yeomen

As far as the geographical distribution of the yeomen throughout the country is concerned, they came from most of the counties in England and from Wales, as shown on the map on page 141, but there was a strong concentration in the south, which was the stronghold of the Tudors.\textsuperscript{2} It is emphasized that the figures shown represent the minimum number in each county, based on surviving information. The figure of 18 for Wales is striking, in view of the distance from the capital. While some of the yeomen retained their homes in the provinces, some moved either temporarily or permanently to places nearer London and the court, and this undoubtedly accounts for the high figures for Kent and Surrey. John Gittons’ will, made in his chamber at the Tower of London on 26 November 1500, shows that he resided at Northampton.\textsuperscript{3} John Forde was described early in Henry VIII’s reign as being of Donyatt, Somerset; Richmond, Surrey; Greenwich, Kent; and London.\textsuperscript{4} His will of 1523 shows him as John Forde of Ilminster, which is about two miles from Donyatt.\textsuperscript{5} In March 1540 Geoffrey Bromefeld was described as being of Westminster, and in May 1546, after his return home to Denbigh, he was referred to as Geoffrey Bromefeld of Wales.\textsuperscript{6} Appendix E shows the counties in which individual yeomen resided, as far as it has been possible to discover this. It is possible that Henry VII was aware of the advice given to Henry IV by his Privy Council in 1400, to recruit retainers and the members of his bodyguard from each county.\textsuperscript{7} This practice avoided the resentment caused by recruiting heavily from a particular county, as Richard II had done in the later part of his reign, when he concentrated on Cheshire men.\textsuperscript{8} As shown in chapter 1, Edward IV’s Black Book, which had its origins in the household ordinances of Edward III, also made the point that yeomen of the crown should be chosen from every lord’s \textsuperscript{3} PROB 11/12 (20 Moone).

\textsuperscript{4} LP I, 438 (3), m.1.

\textsuperscript{5} PROB 11/21 (8 Bodfelde).

\textsuperscript{6} LP XV, 1032, Books of the Court of Augmentations, p.566, citing Augm. Book 212, f.114b; LP XXI i, 963 (128).

\textsuperscript{7} Given-Wilson, p.219.

\textsuperscript{8} Ibid., pp.37, 57 and 215.
Illustration 4. Map of England and Wales, showing counties of origin or residence of stated number of yeomen of the Guard house in England, indicating a wide geographical spread. The first two Tudor monarchs certainly appear to have followed this practice to some extent.

Memorials to individual yeomen

Several yeomen were commemorated by a memorial in their local church, usually a brass. In Higham church, Kent, a brass to Robert Hilton, who died in 1523, records that he was 'late yeoman of the Guard with the high and mighty prince of most famous memory Henry the VIII'. Thomas Lynde was depicted at St. Neot's church, Huntingdonshire, in 1527 wearing the apparel of a yeoman of the Guard, 'with his pole axe, a rose on his breast and a crown on his left breast or shoulder', together with his wives Alice and Joan. Thomas Noke is commemorated in the church of St. John Baptist, Shottesbrook, Berkshire, with his three wives. He is shown in a long gown lined with fur, and bears a crown badge on the left shoulder. The inscription shows that he died on 21 August 1567, in his eighty-seventh year, and includes the information that 'for his great age and virtuous life he was reverenced of all men and commonly called Father Noke', and that he was 'of stature high and comely and for his excellency in artillery made yeoman of the crown'. Below his memorial another plate shows an epitaph in Latin on the death of Thomas Noke by the Lady Elizabeth Hoby, translated thus by Ashmole:

Thou good old Man, and venerably Sage Whole antient Probity, and hoary Age;
Thee justly still a Father and a Friend,
Steady to love, and Faithful to defend:
Accept my last Adieu; Like him may I,
Great Heav’n, thus pious live and peaceful die.

Brasses are also recorded in Lee church, Kent, to Henry Birde, who died in 1545, to Thomas Broke and his wife Anne at Ewelme, Oxfordshire, dating from 1518, and to Thomas Greenway and his wife Elizabeth, in the church of St. Peter and St. Paul, Dinton.

Buckinghamshire. Although Greenway died in 1538, and his wife the following year, the memorial was not erected until 1551, upon the death of their son Richard, a gentleman usher of the Chamber, who is commemorated on a separate brass. In the chapel of St. George at Windsor, on the wall near the south door, a brass plate commemorated George Brooke, who served in the Guard from Henry VIII's reign to Elizabeth I's. He died in 1593, and an epitaph records that:

He lived content with mean Estate,
And long ago prepared to die,
The Idle Person he did hate,
Poor People's Wants he did supply.

The most imposing memorial to a yeoman of the Guard of Henry VIII's time is probably the effigy of Cornelius van Dun, shown in his ceremonial dress, in St. Margaret's church, Westminster. The inscription records that he was born at Breda in Brabant, and served with Henry VIII at Tournai. His concern and care for the poor is also recorded on the monument. He continued in the Guard during the reigns of Edward VI, Mary I and Elizabeth I, dying in 1577 at the age of 93.

Conclusion

Although the yeomen who feature in county pedigrees and memorials may be a small proportion of the hundreds whose names are known, they do provide evidence that a notable number were from families who were fairly wealthy and/or land-owners. This is confirmed by their wills and other legal documents. There were many others, however, who had little beyond their wages and whatever extra fees they could obtain through royal service. The names of those who received no grants and were not involved in legal cases are known chiefly from payments shown in the various royal accounts, from wardrobe warrants, or from lists of royal servants. But for these valuable records, their names would have remained unknown.

2. Ibid.
This thesis has confirmed that the royal bodyguard of the yeomen of the king’s Guard was instituted by Henry VII in the earliest days of his reign, and made its first public appearance at his coronation on 30 October 1485. The Guard’s foundation so early in the reign indicates that it originated from plans formulated by Henry Tudor while in exile, when he was able to observe the courts of Brittany and France, both of which had been influenced by the splendour of the Burgundian court. While Henry Tudor’s interest in wishing to rule in the French fashion may be reflected in the establishment of the Guard, he was cautious in making changes in the royal household, preferring to modify, rather than to dispense with, existing offices. Since many of his supporters had already served Henry Tudor as earl of Richmond during his long exile overseas, while others had joined him after his arrival in Wales, a pool of recruits to the new bodyguard already existed. Thereafter members of the bodyguard were selected on the recommendation of an aristocrat or courtier who had some knowledge of their suitability, either personally or through contacts. Since no formal documents of appointment appear to have been made, however, it is not possible to state exactly when an individual became a yeoman of the Guard.

The evidence presented from Exchequer and Wardrobe records, together with household ordinances and the accounts of the treasurer of the Chamber, has shown the close relationship between the three categories of yeomen of the Guard, yeomen of the Chamber and yeomen of the crown, and the duties which they shared. The varying descriptions are undoubtedly one of the reasons why difficulties have been experienced in identifying some of the earliest yeomen of the Guard, and why references to the Guard are not so numerous in the records of Henry VII’s reign as they became afterwards. Even those described in letters patent as yeomen of the Guard are often subsequently referred to as yeomen of the crown. From an intensive study of these records it appears that all yeomen of the Guard were liable to serve as yeomen of the Chamber (though some were excused this duty), and to be called yeomen of the crown. The distinction appears to have depended on the circumstances or duties on which the individual was engaged at the time the record was made. It is also to be noted that in the accounts showing wage payments made to those members of the Guard who were discharged following reductions in 1515, 1519 and 1526, the three varying descriptions were still used.

From the evidence found, it appears that the lowest complement of the Guard stood at 80, following the reductions of 1526. While this was supposed at the time to be the ‘accustomed’ number in the Guard, it is clear that it did not remain at this level for long. Records both of Henry VII's reign and of Henry VIII's show fluctuations in the strength of the Guard, particularly those arising from increases for war or ceremonial purposes followed by retrenchment. The increase to 88 in 1540 indicates the minimum number considered sufficient to serve the king properly, but many records show that this number was usually exceeded.

Perhaps one of the most surprising aspects about the yeomen of the Guard was the variety of duties which they performed, yet these were largely concerned with security and order within the court, and safeguarding the king's interests when sent out of court. There were always sufficient yeomen on duty to protect the king while others went about his business outside the court, or indeed returned temporarily to their homes and private activities. Duties involving attendance upon other members of the royal family or high-ranking individuals show the confidence placed in the yeomen by the sovereign, as well as his intention to honour those served in this way. The Guard's inclusion in the retinue of those sent in embassy overseas emphasized the ambassador's role as the representative of the English monarch, and enhanced the ambassador's own prestige.

There were several reasons why the yeomen of the Guard were especially distinctive.
They formed the largest group of royal servants based in the royal household, they wore the king's colours, initially, displaying a royal badge, usually the crowned rose, and they bore halberds. The fact that the Guard was so frequently mentioned by visitors to the English court, notably in diplomatic reports, indicates that the corps indeed fulfilled its role in creating the visual impact envisaged by its founder. Clad in particularly sumptuous jackets of the king's livery, or later in red, the Guard played a unique role on all ceremonial occasions, forming a distinctive part of the royal retinue, within the palaces and elsewhere, enhancing the sovereign's reputation as a wealthy and influential ruler. The concept that clothing a particular group of royal servants in the king's livery brought honour and glory to the court was not new in England. According to Edward IV's Black Book, it had always been customary for esquires of the household to wear the king's livery 'for the more glory and in worship this honourable household.' 1 As noted in the Introduction, esquire of the household was a category of royal servant which had greatly diminished by the time Henry VII won the English throne.

It has been demonstrated in this thesis that the bodyguard was indeed a protective corps, as well as a ceremonial retinue. The belief of the chroniclers Polydore Vergil and Edward Hall that Henry VII modelled his bodyguard on that of the French king can be verified by a comparison of the two corps. Evidence has been presented to show the close parallels between the French king’s senior bodyguard of Scotsmen (the ‘Compagnie Ecossaise de la garde du Corps du Roi’) and the yeomen of the Guard, in the way they were clad, wearing the king’s colours and badge, and in their deployment both as a bodyguard and as a ceremonial retinue. It has been suggested that a comparison of these two foundations may also indicate Henry VII’s reason for emphasizing the ceremonial role of his bodyguard, to dispel suspicion that he was beginning to institute a permanent armed force. Temporary increases in the strength of the Guard in both reigns, however, indicate its potential as the nucleus of a standing army. The retrenchment which ensued after military campaigns did not always take place immediately, and a gradual growth usually followed the cuts which were made. The use of the Guard in the garrison at Tournai, lasting for six years, was an extension of its role in protecting the king’s property, but here again this deployment could be interpreted as an intention to create a permanent force. The Guard’s involvement in military and naval activities was not confined to particular campaigns, since the yeomen held minor permanent offices in maintaining and safeguarding weaponry. They also played a significant part in organizing supplies and making preparations for combat. In peace time those who were ship owners could be called upon to patrol the English channel and other waters, to protect merchants and fishermen from pirates, and generally to harass the king’s enemies.

1. Myers, p.128.

The appointment of the yeomen to crown offices in the localities was of great significance. While they were not generally appointed to the top of the hierarchy of local government, they played a role in extending royal policy and authority to the provinces and by virtue of their offices were enabled to recruit men to serve the king in times of war. Through their local offices the yeomen upheld the king’s laws, took offenders into custody, maintained his parks, hunting grounds and forests, and secured the payment of revenues due to the crown. In addition, office holders were able to observe local conditions and report back to the king or his ministers any information which they considered should be made known. They acted as informers on people who made statements or behaved in a way which could be interpreted as injurious or detrimental to the crown. As well as reporting back on local conditions, the yeomen were able to bring news of events at court to their areas of activity. The yeomen of the Guard therefore constituted a significant body of royal servants within the king’s affinity, supplying a connection and a means of communication between central and local government covering wide areas of the country. As well as their appointment to local crown offices, the yeomen served on a variety of commissions, reflecting the trust placed in them in conducting local business efficiently and in the king's interests.

From the rich source of information which legal cases can provide on life in the localities, it has been shown that some of the yeomen had cause to complain about the treatment they received at the hands of their local magnate. As indicated in this thesis, the outcome was not always to the plaintiff's advantage. The fact that the complaints were made at all, however, is an indication of the confidence which the yeomen felt in appealing to the king as their lord and master. The same source also contains evidence that the yeomen were in turn accused by local residents of oppressive behaviour, abusing their influence in the area. The fact that some yeomen were obstructed in carrying out their duties as office holders or commissioners, and on occasion either threatened or physically attacked, certainly indicates that there was strong feeling against some of them, but it is not always clear whether this involved resentment against the incumbent of a particular office or commission, or enmity of a more personal nature.

As a distinctive group within the royal affinity the yeomen of the Guard, at least by the middle part of Henry VIII's reign, were viewed by other courtiers as the recipients of particular favour from the king. This is shown from the actions of those seeking certain offices which had been held hitherto, often for many years, by members of the Guard. It is also indicated in correspondence, where concern was expressed that a yeoman of the Guard was 'making suit' for a stated local office, and suggestions were made of alternative worthy candidates. By the later years of Henry VIII's reign, a number of titled courtiers held offices which had previously been filled by yeomen of the Guard. While this in itself was not unusual, since offices were not distributed according to the social status of the recipient, it does show that the offices to which the yeomen were appointed were seen to be of real value to their social superiors. Probably the value lay in practical benefits, such as the right to hunt in a particular area, or to raise local men for service in the royal army.

It has been demonstrated that the personnel serving in the Guard were drawn from diverse social backgrounds, from those whose families were unrecorded, to tradesmen, business men, farmers and merchants, men of property and land-owners. Some were related to existing household servants, with perhaps a family tradition of royal service, others may have been introduced through previous service in a noble household, or through the petition of an aristocrat or courtier who knew their background. Despite the personal wealth of some of the yeomen, they did not rise to political power, but in several cases the local influence of a yeoman led to his election as mayor and Member of Parliament. This diversity suggests that those who served in the Guard were selected for their personal qualities and suitability rather than for their social standing. David Cecil's rise to the office of sheriff may be exceptional, but it shows that it was possible for a yeoman of the Guard to reach this position eventually. Though Cecil's connection with Sir David Phillips probably influenced his early career, he continued in favour long after the latter's death.

This thesis has concentrated on the early years of the Guard's formation and development, from the time during Henry VII's reign for which documentation proved fragmentary to the end of Henry VIII's reign when it became more copious. It has proved possible to establish the methods of remuneration of the Guard from the 1490's, and to identify the further rewards and benefits which the yeomen received from 1485, including the fee of the crown, paid from the Exchequer. In addition, the fluctuating size of the Guard throughout the two reigns has been revealed, together with its varied roles in naval and military activities. The part played by the yeomen in local offices has also been explored, showing their involvement as members of the royal affinity. Possibly further work might be done on relationships between office-holders in the provinces and sheriffs or fellow courtiers in the area concerned. More research could certainly be carried out on the individuals who served in the Guard in the two reigns covered. The evidence presented here has laid the foundations for future studies of the Guard in subsequent reigns.
Appendix A

Livery of black cloth for Henry VII's funeral

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>John Alenne</th>
<th>John Almer</th>
<th>William Almer</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>John Amyas</td>
<td>Roger ap Griffith</td>
<td>Thomas ap Griffith</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John ap Guilliam</td>
<td>Thomas ap Guilliam</td>
<td>David ap Howell</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hugh ap Howell</td>
<td>John ap Howell</td>
<td>Philip ap Howell</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thomas ap Howell</td>
<td>James ap Jenkins</td>
<td>Lewis ap Rice</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William Atkin</td>
<td>James Attourney</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Baker</td>
<td>Richard Ballard</td>
<td>Groges Banges</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Barkatt</td>
<td>Humphrey Barrington</td>
<td>Roger Batte</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Christopher Battersby</td>
<td>William Bailey</td>
<td>Roger Becke</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hugh Bennett</td>
<td>Richard Blodley</td>
<td>William Blower</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Bolan</td>
<td>Robert Boll</td>
<td>Robert Bollington</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Borton</td>
<td>Roger Brashaw</td>
<td>Robert Brickenden</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Edmond Brereton</td>
<td>John Brereton</td>
<td>Thomas Broke</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Brond</td>
<td>Robert Buckstede</td>
<td>Sander Bull</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>James Burton</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William Cadcote</td>
<td>John Cawdre</td>
<td>David Cecil</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Henry Chilman</td>
<td>Maurice Clon, Clonne</td>
<td>John Con</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Richard Cotton</td>
<td>Roger Crocket</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Edward Decka</td>
<td>John Derbie, Darby</td>
<td>Roland Derley</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William Dyer</td>
<td>William Dodd</td>
<td>Nicholas Downes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Dycconson</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Robert Edwardes</td>
<td>Lawrence Eglisfeld</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Edmond Fermord</td>
<td>Thomas Ferror</td>
<td>John Forde</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Robert Foster</td>
<td>Thomas Fulbrooke</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Gall</td>
<td>John Geffron</td>
<td>Thomas Glover</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Geoffrey Gough</td>
<td>Andrew Greenhill</td>
<td>Thomas Greenway</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thomas Grove</td>
<td>Ralph Grimston</td>
<td>Lewis Gunter</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Gilmin</td>
<td>James Gartsie</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Edward Hall</td>
<td>Robert Hall</td>
<td>William Hamerton</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Hampton</td>
<td>Anthony Hansard</td>
<td>Thomas Has</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Robert Hasond</td>
<td>William Haywood</td>
<td>Baldwin Heath</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thomas Heath</td>
<td>William Higford</td>
<td>Henry Higson</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nicholas Hill</td>
<td>Piers Hogg</td>
<td>Thomas Hodgkins</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Holland</td>
<td>Thomas Holdene</td>
<td>William Holden</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Henry Holgill  John Hollond  John Hooker
Robert Hopkins  John Hopton  Thomas Howend
John Hughthall  Edmond Huntwade  Francis Hyde
Edmond Hill  Henry Hill  Thomas Hill
John Hilton

Edward Ingham

John Jackson  Nicholas Jackson  Thomas Jackson
Thomas Janett  Lewis Johns  Christopher Johnson
David Jones  Thomas Jones

William Keby

Roger Laurance  William Lelle  John Lewis
Robert Leighton  Richard Lake  Thomas Lane
David Lloyd  Thomas Lloyd

John Marcam  John Matthew  John Morgan
John Moyle  John Myche

Robert Nevell  Robert Nicholas  Roger Nicholas
William Norburgh  Hugh Norton

James Oldfield  Robert Orton  Gerard Osborne

Hugh Parker  Richard Pegion  Roland Pelter
Anthony Payne  John Phillip  Richard Phillip
Roland Phillipson  John Poole  Nicholas Pounser
Thomas Pinnock

Thomas Quadryng

John Rayff  Lewis Rede  Lionel Redmand
John Richardson  John Richmond

Roger Salesbury  Oliver Sanndes, Saundes  John Sauntford, Sandford
William Schawte  Yema Seynt, Evan Seint  Richard Slythurst
William Smith  Henry Southworth  Thomas Sounde
William Standon  Lionel Stanley  Henry Strete
Roland Stokall  William Studdon  Robert Swillington

Robert Talbot  Roger Temple  John Thomas
John Thomson  Henry Thornton  Thomas Thurlesby
Edward Trafford  David Trollop

John Vaughan  Nicholas Vazakerley
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Name</th>
<th>Name</th>
<th>Name</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Robert Walker</td>
<td>Piers Warton</td>
<td>John Welles</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Richard Washington</td>
<td>William Weston</td>
<td>John Whalley</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Whitwell</td>
<td>Thomas Williams</td>
<td>Thomas Wood</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Robert Worsley</td>
<td>Thomas Worsley</td>
<td>John Wortley</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Wilson</td>
<td>William Wynnesbury</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

John Yenan [Jevan, or Evan]

Source: LC 2/1, fos.122v-123r, 131, and 134r. Rearranged alphabetically for ease of reference.
Appendix B

Henry VII's Yeomen of the Guard, Crown and Chamber

* yeoman of Guard  † yeoman of Chamber  ‡ yeoman of crown

John Acan†
Hugh Adams†
John Alene*
John Almer*
William Almer*
John Amyas*
Roger ap Griffith*
John ap Guilliam*
David ap Howell*
John ap Howell*
Thomas ap Howell*
James ap Jenkin(s)*
Thomas ap John (ap Jones, Jones)‡
Edward ap Rice‡
Lewis ap Rice*
Thomas Ase†
William Atkin*

David Adams‡
Thomas Aldersey†
William Alee*
Robert Almer‡
Robert Amener†
Owen ap Griffith*
Thomas ap Griffith*
Thomas ap Guilliam*
Hugh ap Howell*
Philip ap Howell*
Maurice ap Hugh†
Griffith ap Jevan†
Richard ap Philip (Philip)*
Hugh ap Rice (Richard)‡
Robert ap Rice†
Richard Assheton†
James Attourney*

Henry Badeley†
William Bailey*
Richard Ballard‡
Gorges Banges*
John Barkatt (Barket)*
Thomas Barnard†
William Barneville (Barnefeld ?)‡
Humphrey Barrington*
Roger Batte*
John Baldwin†
Robert Bell (Bele, Bolle)*
Hugh Bennett*
? Bewell†
Richard Biggis‡
William Blower*
Thomas Boleyn‡
Robert Bollington, Bonnington*
Thomas Bower†
Roger Bradshaw*
Edmond Brereton*
Roger Brereton‡
William Brereton†

Robert Bagger*
John Baker*
Thomas Bambroke‡
Thomas Barbur†
John Barnard†
?- Barneshawe‡
Roger Bartlett‡
Thomas Basshe*
Christopher Battersby*
Roger Becke*
William Bendell†
Richard Berkeley†
Edward Bigge†
Richard Blodley*
John Bolan*
Raynborn Bolling, Bolding‡
John Borton*
John Braband*†
Richard Braine†
John Brereton*
Thomas Brereton‡
Robert Brickenden, Brigandyne*
Alexander Bulle, or Sander Bull
Thomas Broke
John Brond
Richard Brown
Ralph Buckland
Richard Bulkeley
John Burley
James Burton
John Bingham

William Cadcote
Thomas Cadewell
Robert Cantlowe
John Carre
John Catcot
John Cawdre
William Cheseman
Maurice Clonne, Clon
John Con, Coun
John Copledik
Richard Cotton
Thomas Creys
John Crokker
Walter Cunye

John Danastre
John Darby
Richard David, Davy
Edward Decka
Roland Derley
Richard Domerell
Nicholas Downes
John Dudley
William Dyer, Dier
John Dyson

John Ederige, Ederiche
Richard Edwardes
Lawrence Eglisfeld
John Evan [also Jevan ?]

Thomas Ferrow, Ferour
Richard Fissher
Robert Forster, Foster
John Frenche
John Frye
Thomas Furgan

John Brockwell
Thomas Bromley
John Brown
William Brown
Robert Buckstede
Robert Bulkeley
Edward Burton
John Byrne

Thomas Cadogan
Henry Calise, Cales
Henry Carre
Christopher Carrok
John Caterall
John Chamber, a Chambre
Henry Chilman
Richard Colston
William Cope, Coope
Ralph Cotereil
Edward Creswell
Roger Crocket
Richard Cruyse
David Cecil

Thomas Danyell, Daungell
John David, Davy
Thomas Day, Deye
John Dee
William Dodd
Nicholas Dounton
Ralph Drye
John Dyconson
John Desmond
William Dyson

John Edwardes
Robert Edwardes
Robert Elliott
Richard Evan

Edmond Fermord
John Forde
Thomas Freeman
Richard Frere
Thomas Fulbroke
John Gall*
Thomas Gaywood*
John Geffron*
John Gildon†
Thomas Glover*
David Gough†
John Grauntford†
William Green†
Thomas Greenhow†
John Gregory†
John Griffith†
Edward Griffin, Griffith*
Ralph Grimston*
John Guillam (ap Guilliam?)†
Edward Hale, Hall*
Richard Hamerton†
John Hampton*
Edward Hardgill†
Humphrey Harrington (Barrington?)†
Stephen Harrison†
Robert Hasond*
William Haywood*
Baldwin Heath*
John Hewet†
Degory or George Heynes†
William Higford*
Henry Hill*
Thomas Hill*
Thomas Hodgkins*
Thomas Holden*
Henry Holgill*
John Hollond*
John Hoo*
Henry Hopkins*
John Hopton*
Robert Horton†
Thomas Howend*
John Hugthall*
Robert Hunter†
Francis Hyde*
Edward Ingham*
John Jackson*
Thomas Jackson*
James Gartside*
George Geffron*
John Gervoys*
John Gittons†
Henry Goodclerk†
Geoffrey Gough*
Richard Gray†
Andrew Greenhill*
Thomas Greenway*
John Grey†
Thomas Grove*
William Griffith†
Lewis Gunter*
John Gilmin*
Robert Hall*
William Hamerton*
Anthony Hansard†
Thomas Harper†
Robert Harrison†
Thomas Has*
George Hawkins†
John Hereford†
Thomas Heath*
John Hewicke, Howyk†
Henry Hicson, Higson*
Edmond Hill*
Nicholas Hill*
John Hilton*
Piers or Peter Hogge*
William Holden*
John Holland*
John Hony, Honry*
John Hooker*
Robert Hopkins*
Robert Horner†
Thomas Hoskyns†
John Huddelston†
William Hunt†
Edmond Huntwade*
John Ismay†
Nicholas Jackson*
Matthew Jankin, Jenkins†
Richard Pender†
Roland Phillipson*
Richard Phillip*
Robert Plumber†
John Pole*
Roger Porter*
Nicholas Pounser*
John Punche†
William Pye†

Thomas Quadryng*

William Racke*
Richard Rake†
John Rauff, Rayff*
John Rede†
Maurice Rede†
Edward Reynold†
John Richardson*
William Ringeley†
Stephen Rowley†
Robert Rufford†
William Rufford†

Henry Sale†
Oliver Sanndes*
William Schawte*
William Serche†
Henry Skillman†
William Slater, Sclater†
Richard Slythurst*
John Smith†
Thomas Sounde*
Thomas Spence†
John Spynelle†
Lionel Stanley*
Richard Stapull*
William Stedman†
John Stephens†
Roland Stokall*
William Studdon*
John Swinnerton†

Thomas Taylor†
Thomas Talbot†
John Thomas*
John Thomson*

Anthony Payne*
John Phillip†
Richard Pigot*
Clement Plumstede†
Thomas Pole†
Richard Potter†
William Prude†
Nicholas Purfrey, Purefoy*
Thomas Pinnock*

William Radley, Rodley†
Robert Rake†
John Rawlyn†
Lewis Rede*
Lionel Redmand (Leonard Redmayn?)*
Hugh Richard (ap Rice?)*
John Richmond*
John Rothercomme*
John Rigby*
Walter Rufford†

Roger Salesbury*
John Sandford, Santford*
Richard Selman*
Evan Seint, Yema Sancte*
William Scroggs†
Thomas Slytherst†
John Smethurst†
William Smith*
Henry Southworth*
Henry Spencer†
William Standon*
John Stanshaw*
John Stapleton†
Richard Stephen†
William Steven†
Henry Strete*
Robert Swillington*
John Simpson†

Robert Talbot*
Roger Temple*
Robert Thomas*
Henry Thornton*
Appendix C

Oath of allegiance

As for the oath that the Chamberlain shall give to them of the Chamber when they shall be charged

I A B swear by the holy Evangelist that I faith and truth shall bear our sovereign lord Edward the iiiith king of England and France and lord of Ireland and unto the queen our sovereign lady his wife and unto their issue And in and upon the office of A B I shall duly, truly and diligently I shall await and attend unto the [illegible word] I am at this time admitted and received I shall not know any treason or thing prejudicial, compassed, attempted or imagined against our said sovereign lord, our sovereign lady or their issue or any of them but I shall incontinent upon the said knowledge discover it unto my lord chamberlain or unto his deputy if he have any or in their absence to one of the ushers of the said chamber I shall not discover any secrets or thing that may happen to come to mine ears that shall touch the king's counsell or the honour of his chamber And I shall be obedient unto my said lord chamberlain and unto his said deputy if he have any and unto the said ushers And their commandments diligently and faithfully observe and keep to my power I shall eschew all manner riots, making of bends, quarrels and debates either within the said chamber or without but I shall forbid and let all such in commandments as far forth as I may And also let the said officers or one of them have knowledge thereof Also I shall not depart out of the king's Court without licence appointed and had of my said lord chamberlain or his said deputy if he have any Which premises and every of them with all other commandments to be given in the behalf of our said sovereign lord by my said lord chamberlain, his said deputy if he have any or any of the said ushers I shall faithfully observe, obey and keep to the uttermost of my power so god me help and his saints Amen

Source: From the ordinances for the royal household shown in BL Harley Ms. 4107, fos.132v - 133r. Note that the name of the king has not been amended.
Appendix D

Yeomen appointed to County Offices

BEDFORDSHIRE
Thos. Grove
Thos. Greenway
Hen. Birde
Thos. Bottley
Chris. Johnson

Escheator for Bedfordshire and Buckinghamshire
Escheator for Beds. and Bucks.
Bailiff, manors of Shillington and Barton
Bailiff, lordships of Podington, Brokborowe, Norwood, Ridgmont, Segnew and Crawley Bailiff, Wrestlingworth

BERKSHIRE
John Stanshaw
John Stoner
Rob. Gibbes/John Glyn
Wm. Norburgh
John Whitwell
John Williams
Piers Warton
Ric. ap Howell

Bailiff, manor of Crookham; bailiff and keeper, two parks at Crookham
Bailiff, lordships of Cholsey, Blewbury and Hendred; keeper, Onolde wood in manor of Cholsey and all other woods in these lordships
Bailiff, lordship of Steventon
Keeper, great garden at Windsor castle
Bailiff of Finchampstead, or forester, forest of Windsor; keeper of the houses of Easthampstead and the new park there
Keeper, gates and houses of inner ward of Windsor castle
Bailiff and collector, lordship and manor of Sutton Courtenay

BUCKINGHAMSHIRE
Thos. Grove
Thos. Greenway
Lewis ap Rice
John Carre
Ric. Frere
Wm. Vaughan
Thos. Bottley
Thos. Stribithill
Davy Dutton
John Dorset

Escheator for Bedfordshire and Buckinghamshire
Escheator for Beds. and Bucks.; steward of Cuddington; bailiff, lordships of Aston Clinton and Wendover
Bailiff, lordship of Hanslope; keeper of Hanslope park
Bailiff of Aylesbury
Bailiff, town and lordship of Great Marlow
Keeper, manor of Carslow
Bailiff of Bragenham farm
Bailiff of Princes Risborough (duchy of Cornwall)
Bailiff, lordship of Little Brickhill
Bailiff, manors of Langley Marish and Wraysbury

CAMBRIDGESHIRE
Geo. Hawkins
Chris. Johnson
David Cecil

Escheator for Cambridgeshire and Huntingdonshire
Bailiff of Orwell
Bailiff of Whittlesey mere and keeper of swans* *also in Hunts., Lincs., and Northants.

- 159 -
CHESHIRE
James Button    Bailiff of Nantwich
Richard Button  Bailiff of Nantwich
John Champyn/Hugh Proffett    Bailiff, lordships of Norton and Stockham
Ralph Holford    Bailiff, hundred of Northwich
Thomas Sounde    Bailiff of Drakelow and Rudheath; bailiff of Nantwich
Henry Wright    Bailiff of Drakelow and Rudheath
Robt. A Wood    Bailiff, hundred of Eddisbury
John Southall    Keeper, Shotwick park

CORNWALL
Henry Ley    Escheator for Devon and Cornwall; keeper, parks of Hellesbury and Lanteglos
Ralph Buckland    Searcher for ports in county
Edw. Creswell    Searcher for ports in county
John Monkeley    Searcher for ports in county and Plymouth
Robert Walshe    Harbour master, duchy of Cornwall; constable, Trematon castle
William Holden    Keeper, Liskeard park
Lewis ap Rice    Bailiff, lordship of Blisland
William Haywood    Bailiff, lordship of Sheviock
John Upcote    Bailiff, manor of Helston; keeper, Tintagel castle (duchy of Cornwall)

CUMBERLAND
William Lambert    Escheator for Cumberland and Westmorland
John Stapleton    Forester of Inglewood forest
Richard Brown    Forester of Inglewood forest

DERBYSHIRE
Henry Birde    Barmaster and bailiff, Wirksworth (or Low Peak) and Ashbourne; bailiff of Risley wapentake (with Allerton and Plumtree in Notts.) (duchy of Lancaster)
Henry Goodclerk    Keeper, parks of Morley and Belper
Thomas Grey    Bailiff of Horsley
Robert Hopkins    Bailiff of Horsley
Roger Temple    Bailiff of the new liberty in Derbyshire (duchy of Lancaster)

DEVONSHIRE
Henry Ley    Escheator, Devon and Cornwall
John Amadas    Bailiff, liberty of Tavistock; controller of Stannaries, duchy of Cornwall; clerk of market in Tavistock
Edward Creswell    Searcher in ports of Exeter, Dartmouth, Plymouth and Fowey
Richard Selman    Bailiff, lordships of Holsworthy and Torrington
Ralph Buckland    Searcher of ships in the county
Henry Strete    Bailiff, lordship of Westgate without Exeter (or Ex Island); bailiff, hundred of Hayridge; parker of Stokenham, with warren and fishery
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Name</th>
<th>Role</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>George Eastcote</td>
<td>Bailiff, hundred of Hayridge</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Henry Calise</td>
<td>Keeper of Okehampton park</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Robert Thomas</td>
<td>Bailiff of Fremington</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ric. Hammerton</td>
<td>Keeper of Dartington park</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Benedict Weaver</td>
<td>Water-bailiff, Dartmouth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wm. a Lee</td>
<td>Keeper of Goddesbere park</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>James ap Jenkins</td>
<td>Bailiff of Sampford Peverell</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Braband</td>
<td>Bailiff of Exminster; keeper of Otterbury wood</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Byde</td>
<td>Constable of Totnes; under-steward of Cornworthy</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Geo. Geffron</td>
<td>Searcher in ports of Exeter and Dartmouth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Henry Hill</td>
<td>Keeper of Chittlehampton park</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nicholas Jackson</td>
<td>Bailiff of Topsham</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wm. Rolte</td>
<td>Bailiff of Topsham; bailiff of Cullompton; park keeper there</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Willesdon</td>
<td>Bailiff of Topsham</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thomas Leche</td>
<td>Water-bailiff, Plymouth; porter and keeper of Exeter castle</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

DORSET

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Name</th>
<th>Role</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Thomas Kingman</td>
<td>Bailiff of Wimborne Minster; keeper of Kingston Lacy manor</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Stephen John</td>
<td>Keeper, Dorchester gaol</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thomas Alford/</td>
<td>Keeper, Dorchester gaol</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Catcot</td>
<td>Keeper, Dorchester gaol</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Geoff. Johns</td>
<td>Keeper, Dorchester gaol</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Geoff. Bromefeld</td>
<td>Keeper, Dorchester gaol</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Bradley</td>
<td>Ranger, Isle of Purbeck</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Ismay</td>
<td>Gauger in port of Poole</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oliver Turner</td>
<td>Gauger in port of Poole</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William Prude</td>
<td>Gauger in port of Poole</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Rothercomme</td>
<td>Keeper of Marshwood Vale park</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Honry</td>
<td>Bailiff, lordship of Rampisham; park-keeper there</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

DURHAM

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Name</th>
<th>Role</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Thomas Thurlesby</td>
<td>Keeper of Wolles park, Barnard Castle</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Raynborn Bolling</td>
<td>Bailiff, town and lordship of Barnard Castle (bishopric of Durham)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Robt. Bell</td>
<td>Keeper, forest of Marwood and Marwood Hag, Barnard Castle</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Piers Hogg</td>
<td>Keeper, great park of Marwood, Barnard Castle</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Jackson</td>
<td>Keeper, west park of Brancepeth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thos. Caldewell</td>
<td>Bailiff, lordship of Gainford; forester and woodward, Teesdale forest (bishopric of Durham)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

ESSEX

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Name</th>
<th>Role</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>John Markham</td>
<td>Escheator of Essex and Hertfordshire</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ralph Cotereell</td>
<td>Ranger, Waltham forest</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Robert Stoner</td>
<td>Ranger, Waltham forest; bailiff of Chipping Ongar and Harlow</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>James Ederiche</td>
<td>Steward, hundred of Rochford; keeper of Rayleigh park</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John French</td>
<td>Bailiff, town and lordship of North Weald, and parker there; bailiff, lordship of West Thurrock</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
William Green
Bailiff, town and lordship of North Weald and parker there

Steven Harrison
Keeper of woods called the king's woodheath in Essex

William Knight
Keeper of Rochford park

John Lewes
Keeper of Walden park (duchy of Lancaster)

John Rawlyn
Bailiff, hundred of Barstable

Roger A Dale
Bailiff of Wakes Elme [Colne?] and Lamarch

Edmund Horsley
Parker of Newhall (or Beaulieu)

John Stoner
Bailiff of Chipping Ongar and Harlow

Thomas Sounde
Bailiff of Clavering

Nicholas Clerke
Bailiff of Fobbing

John Skegge
Keeper, manor of Writtle, with the old and new warrens there

GLOUCESTER

Roger Porter
Escheator of Gloucester and the marches

Thomas ap John
Bedel, Forest of Dean; porter, St. Briavels

Richard Braine
Riding forester, Forest of Dean; ale-taster, parish of Newland

John Newbury
Bailiff, lordship of Oxenhall

William Slater
Bailiff and woodward of Chedworth; keeper of Whitemead park

John Spynell
Gauger, port of Bristol

Wm. Whetely
Gauger, port of Bristol

John Whittington
Searcher, port of Bristol

Th. ap Guiliams
Ranger, Forest of Dean; keeper, Michael Wood Chase, in lordship of Berkeley and in county of Gloucester

Thomas Basshe
Bailiff, hundreds of Westbury and Botloe; rider, Forest of Dean, and ale taster in parish of Newland; keeper, Whitemead park; sergeant, castle of St. Briavels

William Bendell
Bailiff, hundred of Berkeley; bailiff, manor of Arlingham; keeper, Whitemead park

John Frye
Searcher, port of Bristol

Thomas Fulbrooke
Forester and ranger of King's wood

John Gilman
Keeper, Bristol castle

Geoff. Bromefeld
Clerk of the creeks and passages of Bristol

John Bromefeld
Clerk of the creeks and passages of Bristol

Robert Thomas
Keeper, Eastwood park, lordship of Thornbury

Robert Stoner
Steward of Tredington, Pamington, Fiddington, Stoke Orchard, Kemerton and Northey

HAMPShIRE [or county Southampton]

John Stanshaw
Escheator, for co. Southampton and Wiltshire

Edward Hardgill
Ranger, forest of Woolmer and Alice Holt

John Ismay
Gauger, port of Southampton

William Knight
Ranger, forest of Kingsbere, alias Westbere, nr. Winchester; woodward, woods called Papynholt and Shrowenore

Richard Frere
Ranger, forest of Kingsbere or Westbere, and keeper of woods

Robert Rake
Keeper, Freemantle park
Thos. Westbury
Bailiff and forester of Burley, in the New Forest; keeper of the hunt in land called Sturfeld, and of the woods there; bailiff, castle and hundred of Christchurch

William Coope
Bailiff of Warblington (duchy of Lancaster)

John Gildon
Bailiff of Southampton

Oliver Turner
Gauger, ports of Southampton and Poole

Walter Russell
Bailiff of Havant

HEREFORDSHIRE

John Thomas
Escheator, Herefordshire and adjacent marches of Wales; constable of Snodhill castle; receiver, Snodhill lordship

Th. ap Griffith
Bailiff, lordship of Netherwood

Th. ap Guilliam
Bailiff, lordships of Fownhope and Mansell Lacey

Richard Hope
Bailiff of Mansell Lacey

Yevan Seint
Bailiff of Fownhope

John Williams
Bailiff of Pembridge; keeper of Pembridge park

Richard Stede
Bailiff of Ashperton, Stretton and Yarkhill

Richard ap Davy
Bailiff of Leominster

HERTFORDSHIRE

John Markham
Escheator, Hertfordshire and Essex; gaoler, Hertford gaol

Thomas Sounde
Bailiff of Cheshunt and Waltham Cross; keeper, Cheshunt park

Peter Mainwaring
Bailiff of Flamstead

John Gregory
Bailiff of Hitchin

HUNTINGDONSHIRE

Geo. Hawkins
Escheator, Hertfordshire and Cambridgeshire

David Cecil
Bailiff, Whittlesey mere, and keeper of swans there*; keeper of woods in Glatton and Holme *also in Cambridgeshire, Lincolnshire and Northamptonshire

Lawrence Eglisfeld
Bailiff of Glatton and Holme

Richard Cotton
Bailiff of Glatton and Holme

Chris. Alborough
Keeper, Weybridge forest

Henry Birde
Keeper, Weybridge forest

John Gerveys
Forester, Sapley forest

KENT

Lewis ap Rice
Porter, Dover castle

Robert Palmer
Keeper of Eltham park

Henry Skillman
Keeper, manor and park of Eltham, and new park of Horne

John Rolte
Keeper, Horne park, Eltham

Thomas Creys
Searcher, ports of Margate and Faversham

Nic. Dounton
Gate-keeper and keeper of dungeon, Dover castle

John Copleedick
Keeper of warren by Dover castle

James Ederiche
Keeper, new park at Eltham

Robert Harrison
Keeper, manor of Huntingfield
LANCASHIRE
Adam Holland Bailiff of Salford town and hundred Ric. Rayneshawe Bailiff of Salford town and hundred

LEICESTERSHIRE
Thomas Catlyn Bailiff of Leicester town
Roger Crocket Bailiff of Bottesford
Thomas Decon Bailiff, manors of Hallaton, Laughton, and Amesby
Thomas Gray Constable, steward and bailiff of Castle Donington

LINCOLNSHIRE
Nic. Owdeby Escheator for Lincolnshire and Northamptonshire
Humph. Barrington Bailiff of Bourne
William Barker Bailiff in Lincs. and Yorks. of lands of Melsa monastery
Thomas Brereton Bailiff and keeper of woods, lordships of Holywell and Stretton David Cecil Bailiff, Whittlesey mere, and swan keeper*; bailiff of Shellingthorp *also Cambs., Hunts. and Northants.
Lawrence Eglisfeld Constable of Folkingham castle; bailiff, honour of Folkingham, Caythorpe, Westborough, Stupton and Doddington Welburn
Th. Fulbroke Bailiff of west side of water at Boston
Anthony Hansard Bailiff of Cumberworth and Trusthorpe; keeper of the park and place of Hellowe; receiver of lands
John Jackson Bailiff and woodward, lordship of Linwood, with the hamlets of Thoresby, Tevlbury, Winterton and Stewton
Thomas Jackson Bailiff of Heckington, Aslackby, Bicker, with Digby and Riskington William Keby Bailiff, lordship of Moulton, with Bowsolas, Skirbeck in Boston and Fleet; searcher, port of Boston
Thomas Quadryng Bailiff of Wrangle (duchy of Lancaster), and of Melton Roos
Roger Salesbury Bailiff of Barton-upon-Humber
Robert Trollop Bailiff, town and lordship of Caistor Henry Walker Keeper of Kirkby park, and porter of Bolingbroke castle (both in duchy of Lancaster)
Wm. Woodforth Bailiff, lordship of Stewton

MIDDLESEX
Henry Birde Water-bailiff, river Thames between Staines bridge and head of the river
Edward Cooke Keeper of Hyde park
Robert Kirk Bailiff of Tottenham
Wm. Maddockes Keeper of Kenton park
John Newbury Bailiff, Savoy manor (duchy of Lancaster)
William Cope Bailiff, Savoy manor
Edward Ingham Bailiff, Savoy manor
John Braithwaite Bailiff, Savoy manor
John Lane Bailiff, Savoy manor
Geoff. Bromefeld Bailiff, Savoy manor
MONMOUTH
Richard Lewes Keeper, county gaol at Monmouth

NORFOLK
Thomas Jermy Escheator for Norfolk and Suffolk
William Blower Searcher, port of [King's] Lynn Nicholas Jackson Controller, great and petty custom, port of [King's] Lynn Thomas Boleyn Gauger, port of [King's] Lynn
Roger Crocket Bailiff, lordship of Hanworth
Ralph Drye Bailiff of Little Walsingham and Great Walsingham
James Ederiche Bailiff of the duchy of Lancaster in Norfolk and Suffolk
John Dobbyns Bailiff of Castle Rising
John Gittons Bailiff of Castle Rising
John Olowe Bailiff of Snettisham
John Smethurst Searcher, port of Yarmouth

NORTHAMPTONSHIRE
Nicholas Owdeby Escheator for Northamptonshire and Lincolnshire; bailiff of Higham Ferrers and keeper of park there (duchy of Lancaster); constable of Higham Ferrers castle and keeper of the warren there
Edmond Huntwade Escheator for Northamptonshire and Rutland; keeper of Rockingham forest; gaoler, Northampton castle
David Cecil Keeper of Cliffe (or King's Cliffe) park; bailiff, Whittlesey mere, and swan keeper*
Matthew Jankyn Porter and gaol keeper, Northampton
Thomas Johns Porter and gaol keeper, Northampton castle
Robert Bollington Bailiff, towns of Great Billing and Overstone
John Lewes Bailiff, towns of Great Billing and Overstone
Robert Bonnington Bailiff of Chapel Brampton Lancelot Harrison Bailiff of Guilsborough and Thos. Battersby
Thomas Fulbroke Bailiff of Moulton and keeper of the neighbouring warren
John Hickling Bailiff of Moulton; bailiff of Towcester manor and hundred; bailiff of lands in Grimscoat, lordship of Cold Higham
Geo. Hodgekinson Keeper of Farming wood in Rockingham forest
Thomas Jackson Bailiff of Navesby [Naseby ?]
Thomas Pole Bailiff of Fallesley [Fawsley ?]
Roger Bartlett Keeper of Brigstock park

NORTHUMBERLAND
John Sandford Keeper of Bellister park
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>NOTTINGHAMSHIRE</th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Henry Birde</td>
<td>Chief steward and bailiff, lordship of Allerton and Plumtree (duchy of Lancaster)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Adam Holland</td>
<td>Keeper of New Park, Nottingham</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Robert Lye</td>
<td>Keeper of Nottingham park</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>OXFORDSHIRE</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thomas Broke</td>
<td>Bailiff, woodward and parker of Ewelme</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thomas Glover</td>
<td>Bailiff of Ewelme</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ric. Slythurst</td>
<td>Keeper of Ewelme park</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roger Hacheman</td>
<td>Bailiff of lands late of Dorchester monastery; keeper, woods of Dorchester, Goring and Rewley; keeper, 'le priory wood'</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William Slater</td>
<td>Bailiff of Chadlington</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Whitton</td>
<td>Bailiff of Watlington; keeper, parks of Watlington and Nettlebed</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Robt. Wighthill</td>
<td>Ranger, forest of Wychwood; controller of works and overseer of the foresters and parkers of Woodstock, Havebergh, Stonesfield and Wootton</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ralph Vaux</td>
<td>Bailiff of Chipping Norton</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Glyn and</td>
<td>Keeper of mansion called Gloucester college, outside the</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John James</td>
<td>suburbs of Oxford university</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>RUTLAND</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Edmond Huntwade</td>
<td>Escheator for Rutland and Northamptonshire</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>David Cecil</td>
<td>Bailiff of Preston, Uppingham and Essendine; bailiff of Tinwell</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>SHROPSHIRE</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Baldwin</td>
<td>Escheator for Shropshire and adjacent marches of Wales</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Brockwall</td>
<td>Escheator for Shropshire and adjacent marches of Wales</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Punche</td>
<td>Constable and gaol keeper, Shrewsbury castle</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William Maddockes</td>
<td>Steward or rider, Morfe forest</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William Meghen</td>
<td>Water-bailiff, from Brethyn to Bridgnorth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Burton</td>
<td>Porter, Ludlow castle</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Almer</td>
<td>Bailiff, Wellington-under-Wrekin</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Edwardes</td>
<td>Keeper, Yarnewood park</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Herford</td>
<td>Keeper, Yarnewood park and woods</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Spynell</td>
<td>Bailiff, lordship of Acton Burnell; keeper, Acton Burnell park</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>SOMERSET</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Piers</td>
<td>Bailiff and sheriff of the twelve hides of Glastonbury; bailiff, manors of Pulton, Baltonsborough, Ditcheat, East Pennard, West Pennard, Butleigh and Wrington</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William Bonde</td>
<td>Reeve and bailiff, Charlton Camville, and keeper of two woods there; bailiff, Horethorne hundred</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Byde</td>
<td>Bailiff of Bridgewater; bailiff of Heygrove</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Edward Homersham</td>
<td>Bailiff of Bedminster and keeper of woods there</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Rothercombe</td>
<td>Bailiff of Blagdon</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

- 166 -
Thomas Kingman
Thomas Alford
Geoffrey Johns
Geoff. Bromefeld
Henry Thornton
John Catcot
John Forde
Thomas Fulbroke
William Gibbs
John Stanshaw
Thomas Wortham

Bailiff of Somerton; keeper of Ilchester gaol
Keeper, Ilchester gaol
Keeper, Ilchester gaol
Keeper, Ilchester gaol; controller of Customs, Bridgwater; bailiff and parker, Curry Mallet
Keeper, Ilchester gaol; bailiff of East Brent, Meare, North Load, South Brent, Berrow, Lympsham, Ham, Sevington Denneys, West Monkton and Brent Marsh
Keeper of Donyatt park
Forester and ranger in Fulwood forest
Bailiff of Whitestone
Bailiff of Wellow
Bailiff of the hundred of Whitley and the manors of Weston, Middlezoy, Otherey, Ereington [Wrinton?], Shapwick, Ashcott, Walton and Street

STAFFORDSHIRE
John Dyson
Richard Stapull
Thomas Gaywood
John Gerveys
Thomas Gray
John Smith
Thomas Taylor
Roger Temple

Bailiff of La Foren of Walsall; keeper of Walsall park
Bailiff of La Foren of Walsall; keeper of Walsall park
Porter of Stafford castle; bailiff of Mawdeley and Borlstone
Bailiff of Haughton, Offley and Doxey
Porter of Tutbury
Bailiff of the lands of Trentham priory
Bailiff, lordship of Wolverhampton
Bailiff of the new liberty in Staffordshire; keeper, Rolleston park (both in duchy of Lancaster)

SUFFOLK
Thomas Jermyn
Robert Fenne
John Owseley

Escheator for Suffolk and Norfolk
Bailiff of Kersey
Bailiff, lordship of Blythburgh, and keeper of warren there; keeper, Westwood park

SURREY
David Adams
Stephen John
Thomas Johns
Richard Pigot
William Standon

Escheator for Surrey and Sussex
Keeper, Feccherey park
Keeper, Witley park
Keeper, Portnall park
Alnager and collector for Surrey and Sussex

SUSSEX
David Adams
William Cheseman
John Rigby
William Standon

Escheator for Sussex and Surrey
Bailiff of Lewes and Bramber; clerk of the market, Lewes
Bailiff of Rye
Alnager and collector for Sussex and Surrey
WARWICKSHIRE

Robert Acurs  Bailiff and parker, Berkswell
Edward Griffin  Bailiff and parker, Berkswell
Richard Newnham  Bailiff and parker, Berkswell
William Almer  Keeper, Grove park
Thomas Grey  Keeper, Grove park
Robert Bagger  Bailiff and parker, Maxstoke
Edmond Brereton  Bailiff of Henley-in-Arden; keeper of the great park and the little park there
John Broking  Bailiff of Tysoe
William Brown  Bailiff of Brailes and keeper of warren there
Robert Davinport  Bailiff of Wolford
Baldwin Heath  Bailiff of Solihull; surveyor of the king’s studs in Warwickshire and Worcestershire
William Maddockes  Bailiff of Solihull
Degory Heynes  Bailiff of Snitterfield; keeper of warren, lordship of Warwick
William Hunt  Warrener in lordship of Warwick
John Hopton  Porter of Warwick castle and keeper of the garden there called ‘le Vyneyard’
Humphrey Reynold  Bailiff, lands late of Stoneleigh monastery
John Swinnerton  Porter of Warwick castle and keeper of garden there
Thomas Taylor  Keeper of Warwick gaol
Piers Warton  Bailiff and parker, manor of Cholesmere
John Williams  Keeper of Lapworth park; keeper of artillery in Warwick castle

WESTMORLAND

William Lambert  Escheator for Westmorland and Cumberland
John Sandford  Steward, town of Marton

WILTSHIRE

John Stanshaw  Escheator for Wiltshire and co. Southampton
John Burley  Porter, Devizes castle; keeper, Devizes park
Richard Rake  Ranger, forest of Grovely
John Thomson  Bailiff and warrener of Sherston
Thomas Hay  Bailiff and warrener of Sherston
Richard Gilling  Keeper, Wiltshire common gaol
George Gate  Keeper, Wiltshire common gaol, Salisbury
Ric. Washington  Bailiff and parker of Chilton
Laur. Serle and Robt. Wamsley  Bailiff, town of Chippenham
John Piers  Keeper of warren at Everleigh

WORCESTERSHIRE

John Brockwall  Escheator for Worcestershire
John Edwardes  Bailiff of Bewdeley; keeper of the park and manor there (earldom of March)
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Name</th>
<th>Position and Details</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Lewis Lloyd</td>
<td>Bailiff of Yardley manor</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William Pye</td>
<td>Bailiff, hundred of Doddingtree</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Robert Rufford</td>
<td>Bailiff and forester of Shrawley</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Walter Rufford</td>
<td>Forester of Shrawley; keeper, Abbutley [Abberley?] park</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Knottesford</td>
<td>Bailiff, lordship of Upton-on-Severn; keeper of Hanley park</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Barkatt</td>
<td>Bailiff and parker of Chaddesley Corbett</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Andrew Greenhill</td>
<td>Bailiff and parker of Redmarley</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Greenhill</td>
<td>Bailiff and parker of Redmarley</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William Penson</td>
<td>Keeper, parks of Eymore and Hallow</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Swinnerton</td>
<td>Keeper, Upton park</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Piers Warton</td>
<td>Bailiff and parker of Salwarpe</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Robert Stoner</td>
<td>Bailiff, lordships of Croome Simon and Bushley</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Hancock</td>
<td>Bailiff, lordships of Croome Simon and Bushley</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

YORKSHIRE

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Name</th>
<th>Position and Details</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>John Sandford</td>
<td>Bailiff of Hooton Pagnell</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John a Chamber</td>
<td>Forester, ranger and bowbearer of Galtres forest</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Welles</td>
<td>Bowbearer and collector, Galtres forest</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Peter Hogg</td>
<td>Keeper of Marwood great park, Barnard Castle</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Baldwin</td>
<td>Forester, Galtres forest; bailiff of Sutton upon Derwent, Elvington, and Skirpenbeck</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William Serche</td>
<td>Forester, Galtres forest; forester of Raincliff, lordship of Seamer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William Horseley</td>
<td>Bailiff, lordships of Cropton and Skirpenbeck; forester, Galtres forest</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>James Borough</td>
<td>Bailiff, lordships of Sutton-on-Derwent and Elvington</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William Barker</td>
<td>Bailiff in Yorks. and Lincs. of lands of Melsa monastery</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Robt. Rissheton</td>
<td>Keeper of Sandal park</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Caterall</td>
<td>Keeper of the South Park of Burstwick, Holderness, and of the manor there</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ralph Warbleton</td>
<td>Keeper of the North Park, Holderness</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Richard Gray</td>
<td>Coroner and bailiff of the honour of Holderness</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>David Trollop</td>
<td>Bailiff of Shirbourne in Herforth, Lythe and Krayton</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Gregory</td>
<td>Bailiff, lordship of Crakehall; keeper of the king's woods there</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chris. Chapman</td>
<td>Gaoler, York castle</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Griffith</td>
<td>Keeper of Blansby park, in Pickering Lith (duchy of Lancaster)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William Snaith</td>
<td>Bailiff, lordship of Wakefield, and keeper of new park there</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Henry Marton</td>
<td>Keeper of Wanneles park</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Smith</td>
<td>Bailiff, part of manor of Cottingham and Hessle</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Humphrey Chawney</td>
<td>Bailiff of Bridlington</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Henry Carre</td>
<td>Bailiff of Doncaster; keeper of Fyppen park</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Robert Bell</td>
<td>Bailiff of Doncaster</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Philip Wilde/</td>
<td>Bailiff of Long Newton</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Belson</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Carre</td>
<td>Keeper of Credelyng park</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Edward Decka</td>
<td>Forester, forest of Sowerby</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nicholas Downes</td>
<td>Bailiff and parker of Swillington</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lawrence Eglisfeld</td>
<td>Bailiff and parker of Sheriff Hutton</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Grey</td>
<td>Keeper of woods and old park, Wakefield</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Name</td>
<td>Role and Details</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>-----------------------</td>
<td>----------------------------------------------------------------------------------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thos. Johnson</td>
<td>Bailiff of Swawdell, co. Richmond</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thomas Leche</td>
<td>Bailiff of Langton</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thomas Quadryng</td>
<td>Searcher, port of Kingston-upon-Hull</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Prestman</td>
<td>Bailiff and collector of the lands of Newland preceptory</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>WALES</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Peter Motton</td>
<td>Sheriff of Flint; constable, Pembroke castle; office of ‘raglership constabulary’, co. Cardigan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Robert Lloyd</td>
<td>Escheator and attorney of Denbigh, North Wales; bailiff errant, lordship of Denbigh in the marches of Wales; keeper of Gaulghill park, lordship of Denbigh; clerk of the king's works in Denbigh castle and park; keeper of the gaol, town of Denbigh</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Thomas</td>
<td>Steward and receiver, lordship of Haye and Glynbough; constable of Haye castle; receiver for Ogmore</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Owen ap Griffith</td>
<td>Steward and hayward, Laugharne, Carmarthen; constable of Laugharne castle</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Robert Jay</td>
<td>Constable, Laugharne castle; forester, Laugharne forest; bailiff, town and lordship of Laugharne</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Griffith Rede</td>
<td>Customer, ports of Pembroke, Tenby and Haverfordwest; office of ‘raglership constabulary’, co. Cardigan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>James ap Jenkin</td>
<td>Office of ‘raglership constabulary’, co. Cardigan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Richard Philip</td>
<td>Ragler, co. Cardigan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Anteknap</td>
<td>Porter, Flint castle</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>William Almer</td>
<td>Bailiff of Burton and Alynton, in Bromefeld lordship; keeper, Merseley park, Bromefeld, and Little Park, Denbigh</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Holland</td>
<td>Keeper of Little Park, Denbigh</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Amyas</td>
<td>Keeper of Moktre chase, Wigmoresland</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Geoff. Bromefeld</td>
<td>Keeper of the wood in the little park, lordship of Chirk</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maurice Clon</td>
<td>Clerk of the courts of Radnor and Melenyth; keeper of Knoclas forest; sergeant of the lordship of Radnor; keeper of New Radnor park</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>David ap Howell</td>
<td>Forester of Cornattyn, Montgomery, North Wales</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Walter Lewes</td>
<td>Bailiff of Kidwelly, Karnollan and Iskennen (duchy of Lancaster)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Richard Newbold</td>
<td>Porter, Ruthland [Rhuddlan?] castle, Flintshire</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Peter Griffith</td>
<td>Porter, Ruthland [Rhuddlan?] castle, Flintshire</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Griffith</td>
<td>Keeper, Hawarden park, Flintshire</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Henry Hopkins</td>
<td>Forester, Corndon forest</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Gunter</td>
<td>Recorder and clerk of court, Abergavenny</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Robert Davies</td>
<td>Recorder, lordships of Bromefeld, Yale and Chirk</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Reynolds, alias John ap</td>
<td>Clerk of the peace and of the crown in counties</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rhydderch</td>
<td>Merioneth and Anglesey</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Robert Griffith</td>
<td>Receiver, lordship of Ruthin</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>IRELAND</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Sandford</td>
<td>Constable, Cragfergus castle</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Byde</td>
<td>Water-bailiff, city of Duvelyn and town of Drogheda</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

† Mockdre

* Carrickfergus ISLE OF MAN
John Sandford / Robert Gibson
Water-bailiffs, Isle of Man

CALAIS
Piers Lloyd
Customer at the Lanterngate
John Bingham
Customer at the Lanterngate
Richard Gray
Bailiff and receiver, lordships of Sandgate and Hammes

TOURNAI
Henry Spurr
Chief bowyer and keeper of the bows of the ordnance
John Clogge
Gunner quartermaster
Roger Hacheman
Keeper of the seal of the bailliage (the seal royal)
Robert Kirk
Tipstaff of the nightly privy watchword

Constables
John Prince
William Bentall
Richard Forster
Robert Mitchell
John Erdeley
Thomas Gray
Robert Axe
Thomas Stribithill
William Harford
Richard Dobell
Evan Bodmer
John Brodger
Thomas Walett
Richard Stone

Vinteners
Robert Leighton
Henry Birde
Gerard Osborne
Clement Frere
Hugh Bennett
Griffith Rede
John Turner
Roger Griffith
Richard Heybourne
John Allen

- 171 -
Appendix E
Yeomen of the Guard by County

BEDFORDSHIRE
Thomas Lynde or Lyne, Dunstable, Beds., yeoman of the crown, gent. (buried St. Neots)
LP I i, 438 (3) m.6, p.238

BERKSHIRE
George Brooke (buried chapel of St. George, Windsor)
Pote, pp.406-7
Robert Delwood, Abingdon
Will PROB 11/28 (7 Alenger)
Thomas Noke, Shottesbrook, son of Richard Noke of Braye, yeoman of crown
Druitt, p.286; VCH Berkshire, iii, p.169
Henry Spencer, Hampstead-Marshall
Wedgwood, Biographies, p.786
John Stanshaw, Reading
Wedgwood, Biographies, p.802; Will PROB 11/18 (19 Holder)
Edmond Stoner, Windsor
LP XI, 202 (25)

BUCKINGHAMSHIRE
Lewis ap Rice, bailiff of Hanslope, yeoman of crown
LP I i, 438 (1), m.8, p.207. VCH Bucks., iv, p.235
Thomas Broke, gent. of Princes Risborough, Bucks., and Ewelme, Oxon., parker, bailey and woodward of Ewelme, clerk of the cheque of the Guard in the King's Household, late of Swyncombe, Oxon., and servant of Edmund de la Pole, gent. (buried Ewelme)
LP I i, 438 (1), m.12, p.209
Thomas Greenway, Dinton
Will PROB 11/27 (20 Dyngeley)

CAMBRIDGESHIRE
Robert Talbot, Ely, Cambridge, and Ipswich and Halley, Suffolk, yeoman of crown, yeoman or innholder
LP I i, 438 (3), m.11, p.262

CHESHIRE
Henry Southworth, born Halton Castle, parish of Runcorn. Yeoman of crown and Guard to Henry VII and Henry VIII. See also under Lancashire
Weever, p.286
Thomas Sounde
Lancs. & Chesh. Cases in Star Chamber, i, 129; Williams, pp.201-2
CORNWALL
Henry Cales, or Calise, yeoman of Chamber to Henry VII, escheator of Devon, alias of Lelant, co. Cornwall
John Davy of Fowey
John Flamank, or Flamoke, of Boscarme, nr. Bodmin, Cornwall, also Bartholomew Flamank, his brother

CUMBERLAND
Lawrence Eglisfeld: father from Eglesfeld, Cumberland see under Yorkshire

DEVON
John Alenne of Devon (probably Fremington)
John Amadas, Tavistock; Eltham, Kent; Launceston, Cornwall
Richard Cruyse, Barnstable, Devon
George Geffron, Otterbury St. Mary, gent. or searcher, late of London, merchant
John Rudgewey, Exminster, yeoman of Guard, alias butcher
Henry Strete, late of London, gent., late yeoman usher and yeoman of Guard

DORSET
Richard Phillips, Poole and Charboro', Dorset; Southwark, Surrey; and London. Son of Thos. Phillips of Montacute, Somerset

ESSEX
Thomas Cocke, Prittlewell
John Griffiths, Eystanes ad Montem *
(possibly) Robert Hall, London and Braintree, merchant, haberdasher or yeoman, keeper of the king’s prison of Ludgate
(possibly) William Holden, Great Chesterford, Essex
Edmund Horsley, Boreham
William Morice of Chipping Ongar and London. Son of James Morice of Roydon, Essex
William Rolte, Chigwell, Essex; and Stolton, Hunts.

GLOUCESTERSHIRE
John Frye, searcher of ships in Bristol
John Gilmin, Bristol

*possibly Easton
Andrew Greenhill, Cheltenham

John Greenhill

John Hancock of the king’s Guard (possibly Tewkesbury)

Thos. Hoskyns, Bristol, gent., late yeoman of crown

John Whittington, gent. or merchant, searcher of Bristol, porter of Tower of London

HAMPShIRE

Thomas Dymock, Goddishuth [Godshill ?], Isle of Wight

Hervy Hayward, yeoman of crown, Hamoll [Hamble ?], alias of Portsmouth

William Knight, Stockbridge, yeoman of crown

Richard Rede, late of Petersfield, yeoman of Guard, alias soldier of Tournai

Anthony Saunders, of Southwick, Hants., alias of London, yeoman of Guard

Thomas Westbury of Winkton in parish of Christchurch, Twynham and Ringwood, Hants., esq., keeper of the chase of Bur’fyld and Holnest wood, Hants., Henry VII’s bailiff of the castle and hundred of Christchurch

HEREFORDSHIRE

John ap Guilliam, Fawley, Herefordshire

(possibly) Thomas ap Guilliam, Bredwardine, Herefords.

Richard Stede, Hereford

HERTFORDSHIRE

Thomas Johnson, St. Albans

HUNTINGDONSHIRE

Thomas Lynde - see under Bedfordshire [see also VCH Hunts., ii, pp. 342n and 344n]

KENT

Thomas Bateherst, Canterbury

John Bingham, Dover, yeoman of the crown
Henry Birde, Lewisham and Eltham (brass in Lee church), yeoman of the king's bows

Thomas Boys, Calais and Walmer, Kent, son of John Boys
John Bromefeld (buried East Greenwich)
Robert Brickenden, Briganden, Brigandyne, Smallhythe, Kent, alias of Portsmouth
Philip Chute, Horne Place, Appledore, Kent

Roger Ellis, Greenwich

Thomas Hawkins, Boughton-under-Blean
Robert Hilton, Higham
Richard Keys or Kaye, Brockley and Greenwich, son of Thomas Keys or Kaye
Richard Lewis, Lee

William Lincol, Isle of Thanet, yeoman of crown
William Payne, East Wickham
William Pole, Bexley

John Rolte, Eltham?
Adam Sampson, Darenth
Henry Skillman, Eltham, yeoman of the crown

Simon Symmes, Greenwich

(possibly) Thomas Vaughan, Dover, Crick in the lordship of Chepstow, and London, soldier of Calais, bailiff of Dover, yeoman or waterbailiff
William Winchester, Greenwich
John Woodlesse, Harwich, yeoman of crown

LANCASHIRE
Piers or Peter Warton, Holton, Lancs.
Probably James Gartside and Henry Southworth

LEICESTERSHIRE
Thomas Gray, Wymondham
(probably) Geoffrey Villers, Brooksby

Drake, pp.59, 229-30
Bindoff, i, p.479
(Will) Drake, p.111
LP III ii, 2992 (21)
Bindoff, i, p.647; LP XX ii, 1035, p.515
Will PROB 11/28 (7 Alengre)
LP XXI ii, 407
Belcher, ii, 215, p.68
The Pedigree Register, i, p.196
LP XXI ii, 774, p.438; Drake, p.233, col. 2
LP I i, 749 (38)
Belcher, ii, 465
Will PROB 11/28 (7 Alenger)
(Will) Drake, p.201
SP 2/G, f.211v
LP I, 1223; Will, Kent CRO (DRb/PWR.8, f.60)
LP I i, 438 (3), m.16, p.244
(Will) Drake, p.111
Harris, p.68

Wedgwood, Biographies, p.971
Names in county

Somerville, i, p.574
E. Acheson, A Gentry Community c.1422- c.1485, p.255
LINCOLNSHIRE

Thomas Barbur, Spilsby
- Callene, Stamford

David Cecil, Stamford

Anthony Hansard, Hellowe; Intwood, Norfolk, alias of London, alias of Owersby, Lincs. Receiver of lands of late Lord Welles and Lady Cecilia (possibly) Thos. Quadryng, Hamby in Somerby, Grantham, Wrangle in Holland, and Keele (Keelby ?) in Lindsey

LONDON

John or Richard Barlow, Shoreditch

Richard Fisher, late of London, yeoman of crown

John Gelston, alias Kelston, wireseller, yeoman of crown

John Gildon, will states of London

John Gilmin, son of John Gilmin of Bristol

John Lorkyn, St. Clement Danes, London, butcher, alias yeoman of the crown, alias of Hornsey, Middx., yeoman of Guard

John Matthew, citizen and baker of London

Richard Potter, late of London, yeoman of crown

Oliver Turnour, Turner, gent., vintner of London, late of the Household of Henry VII

WESTMINSTER

Richard Biggis, Westminster, yeoman of crown of Henry VII

Edward Ingham

Hugh Pigot

MIDDLESEX

Thomas Haselbury, Holborn, Middlesex, sergeant of the Guard

Lawrence Serle, late of Hoggesdon [Hoggeston, Bucks.?], alias of Hackney, sergeant at arms

Robert Shepherd, Shepperde

CCR, ii, 447
LP XIII i, 1350/ii
VCH Northamptonshire Families, ii, 655
LP I, 449 and 1587 LP I, 5508
LP I i, 438 (1), m.24, p.215
E101/418/5, f.27; LC 2/2, f.38v
Rot. Parl., vi, p.273
LP II ii, 3731
CPR Henry VII, ii, p.91; Wedgwood, Biographies, p.374
LP IV i, 464 (27); Bindoff, ii, p.217
LP III i, 2749 (12)
Cal. of Wills in Court of Husting, London, ii, p.636
Rot. Parl., vi, p.273
LP I i, 438 (3), m.4, p.236. Will PROB 11/20 (2 Maynwaryng)
LP i, 1803 (1), m.1, p.817
WAM 19810, 18048
REQ 1/5, f.195v
LP IV i, 137 (19), p.58
CPR Elizabeth 1558-60, p.183
LP I, 3730 and 3994
NORFOLK
(possibly) William Blower, searcher of ships in King’s Lynn Thomas Boleyn, Bishop’s Lynn and Boston, gent., innholder, late yeoman of crown to Henry VII
(possibly) John Dobbins, bailiff of Risying (Castle Rising?)

NORTHAMPTONSHIRE
John Brockwell, Brockwall, Kettering
Thomas Catlyn, Hardgrave
John Getyn or Gittons, Northampton, and Tower of London
Edmond Huntwade, late escheator of Northampton and Rutland.
Porter and gaol keeper of Northampton castle
Nicholas Owdeby, Higham Ferrers
William Smyth, Northampton

OXFORD
Thomas Broke, Swyncombe - see under Bucks.
William Coope, Banbury, later lived in Hants. [Wormleighton, Warwicks., after marriage with a Spencer daughter]
Roger Hacheman, Ewelme
(possibly) John Richmond, Henley

SHROPSHIRE
Richard Bulkeley, Newport, Salop., London, and Drayton, Salop., yeoman of crown
John Turner of the Guard, Ludlow

SOMERSET
(possibly) William Cadcote or Catcote (probably related to John Catcot)
John Catcot, Batcombe, yeoman of Guard
John Forde, Donyatt, Soms., Richmond, Surrey, Greenwich, Kent, and London, yeoman or gent.
John Pole, West Harptree, Bridgewater, Frome Selwod and Midsomer Norton, Soms., and Randeleston, Dorset, gent., late yeoman of crown

- 177 -
Henry Thornton, Playstrete, yeoman, pardoner or gent., Henry VII's keeper of Ilchester gaol

STAFFORDSHIRE
(possibly) Robert Bagger of parish of Eccleshall, collector of tax
Richard Browne, Lichfield, yeoman or gent., yeoman of crown
Edward Burton, yeoman of crown and gent., Hyde
John Dyson, Lichfield and Walsall
Roger Temple, Barton under Needwood, gent.

SUFFOLK
Thomas Hervy, yeoman of crown, Rickinghall
William Sabyn, Ipswich

SURREY
Thomas Bulla or Bulley, Southwark, yeoman of crown and Guard
Robert Fremling, yeoman of Guard, Lingfield
Edmund Hill, Shere, or Downe in Shire parish and Sutton, yeoman or gent., yeoman of crown
Richard Dygon, sen., Lingfield
Richard Gilmin, Reigate hundred William Heybourne, Reigate hundred
Richard Morrant, Lingfield
William Smith, Titsey
John Taylor, Lingfield
Reginald Taylor, Lingfield
Thomas Jackson, Newington
John Piers, West Molesey
William Shale, alias Fryer, Kingston, Surrey, yeoman of crown
William Standon, Mitcham, gent., yeoman of the Household

LP I i, 1803 (2), m.6, p.823
Cal. of Fine Rolls, 245
LP I i, 438 (2), m.26, p.229
CCR, i, 345
LP I i, 1803 (2), m.4
LP I i, 438 (2), m.32, p.233; LP I, 1480; Somerville, i, p.549
CCR, i, 340
Mariner's Mirror, 41, pp.209-221; Bindoff, iii, p.242
Bindoff, i, p.541
E314/40 (47)
LP I i, 438 (2), m.26, p.230
LP XIV i, p.294 (Muster of 1539)
Ibid.
Ibid.
Ibid.
Ibid.
Ibid.
Ibid.
Ibid.
Will PROB 11/21 (12 Bodfede)
Will PROB 11/42b (45 Chaynay)
LP IV i, 1533 (12)
LP I i, 438 (2), m.24, p.228
SUSSEX
Richard Berkeley, Rye, late yeoman of crown, late searcher port of Chichester; also of Winchelsea
Peter Chadwick, East Hoathly
William Cheseman, bailiff of Lewes
John Cooke, Edburton (1557-8)
Richard Domerell, Seaford, yeoman of crown
Robert Harrison, yeoman of crown, supervisor of ordnance works in Ashdown forest
William Palmer, Waldron
John Rigby, bailiff of Rye

CPR Henry VII, ii, p.416; LP I i, 438 (1), m.4, p.205; Cal. of Fine Rolls, 516; Bindoff i, p.419
Sussex Rec. Soc., 56, p.123
Campbell, i, p.66; Sussex Notes and Queries, 5, no. 4, p.99
Sx. Rec. Soc., 16, p.102; 42, p.122
CPR Henry VII, ii, p.37
E404/81/1, m.108; E405/78, f.39v; Sx. Rec. Soc., 16, pp.8-10; STAC 2/3, pp.170-1
Sx. Rec. Soc., 16, p.64
Campbell, i, p.53; E.Sx. R.O., Rye Ms. 60/3, f.55v

WARWICKSHIRE
Nicholas Bradshaw, Coventry, yeoman of crown
William Brown, Brailes
Baldwin Heath, of Forde Hall, Aspley, in parish of Wootton, and Castle Bromwich
William Hunt, Coventry, weaver or clothmaker, late yeoman of crown
Nicholas Purfrey, Purifoy, Purefoy, yeoman of crown to Henry VII
Humphrey Reynolds, Coventry

LP II i, 1009
Leadam, ii, pp.419, 654; VCH Warws., v, p.18
Cl.323, 30; Leadam, ii, p.451; VCH Warws., iii, p.214
LP I i, 438 (3), m.10, p.240
LP XIII ii, 1198

WESTMORLAND
John Sandford, Appleby

LP IV iii, 5906 (4)

WILTSHIRE
John Burley, late of Devizes, late gent. usher of Henry VII
Roger Colley, Wanborough, Wilts.
John Thomson, yeoman of crown, Wiltshire

LP I i, 438 (3), m.15, p.244
Bindoff, i, p.676
Rot. Parl., vi, p.383
Richard Washington, Hungerford and Charleton Strete, late yeoman of crown

WORCESTERSHIRE
John Barkett, Chaddesley Corbett, yeoman, bailiff and park keeper
Hugh Dee, Worcester

YORKSHIRE
Lawrence Eglisfeld (descent from Eglesfeld of Eglesfeld, Cumberland)
Henry Marton, gent., Essheton [Eston ?], Skipton, Elslack, or Eyrton, in Craven, Yorks., late yeoman of crown to Henry VII, son of Lionel
James Oldfield, Meltham, Yorks., Brington and Long Buckby, Northants., yeoman of crown
(possibly) Richard Pek or Peke, Wakefield, yeoman of Henry VII
(possibly) Roland Stokhall or Stokall, Beverley, Bishop Burton and Cottingham, yeoman
John Smith, Cottingham
William Serche, yeoman of crown
Robert Hunter, Thornton

WALES
John Almer and William Almer, sons of John Almer of Denbighshire
Maurice ap Hugh, late of Okeley, in earldom of March in Wales, late yeoman of crown, alias late of Westminster
Griffith ap Jevan, Kylken, N. Wales, and Westminster, late yeoman of crown
Geoffrey Bromefeld, Ruabon, Denbighshire
Thomas Cadogan of Wales, yeoman of crown, late of Dunster, Soms., merchant or mercer
John David of Powis Land
Elis Decka, lordship of Bromefeld
(possibly) John Griffith of Montgomery and London, soldier of Calais
William Griffith, Bangor

LP I i, 438 (4), m.11, p.262
LP I i, 438 (3), m.3, p.236
Bindoff, ii, p.25
Surtees Soc., 116
LP I i, 438 (1), m.3, p.205
LP I i, 438 (3), m.6, p.237
LP I i, 438 (3), m.25, p.234
LP I i, 438 (3), m.21, p.248
LP XX ii, 1035, f.31; LP XVI, 1391 (5)
CPR Henry VII, ii, p.120; North Riding Rec. Soc., NS, 1, pp.133 and 140
Glover’s Visitation of Yorks.
Bindoff, i, p.313
CPR Henry VII, i, pp.257-8
LP I i, 438 (3), m.5, p.237
Antiquaries Jnl., 62, pp.85-6
LP I i, 438 (3), m.24, p.250; Soms. Rec. Soc., 19, p.158
LP XX ii, 1035, f.29
REQ 2/12/154
LP I i, 438 (3), m.23, p.249
LP XX ii, 1035, f.31
Hugh Lewis alias Howell ap Ll’i’n ap Jevan ap David, late of Revynrose or Keffunros, co. Merioneth, gent., late constable of Harlech castle, yeoman of Chamber

David Lloyd, Cherbury

David Lloyd, Kiddowen

Griffith Mores, ap Mores, N. Wales

Roger Porter, Wallespole in Powisland, N. Wales, and Westminster, late yeoman of Guard, gent., son of Hugh Maurice Rede, yeoman of crown

John Reding, Denbigh

John Thomas, Kidwelly or Glamorgan, yeoman of Chamber.
Possibly of Cowbridge, Glamorgan

Lewis Watkins, ap Watkin, of Llangorse, Brecon and Upton, Pembroke

LP I i, 438 (2), m.9, p.220

LP XX ii, 1035, f.30

Ibid.

STAC 2/28/76

LP I i, 438 (4), m.18, p.266

DL 41/839, f.144

LP XX ii, 1035, f.29

Somerville, i, p.642,
DL 41/839, f.144v

Will PROB 11/32 (6 Populwell)
Appendix F

Biographical Notes

John and William Aimer

John and William Aimer were sons of John Aimer or Aylmer who adopted the name of his residence in Denbighshire. The Aimer family was of ancient Welsh descent, tracing its pedigree back to Ithel ab Eunydd in the eleventh century. The father was a supporter of Henry Tudor and became a marshal of the Hall in the royal household.\(^1\) For his good service John Aimer senior was granted for life in November 1489 the office of sergeant at arms with Prince Arthur, with 12d. a day from the issues of the earldom of Chester.\(^2\) He surrendered his patent for this office, however, on 4 July 1492, in order to be released from a debt of £12 owing to the Chester Exchequer.\(^3\)

John Aimer junior and his brother William were granted the fee of the crown of 6d. a day on 22 March 1486, with effect from Michaelmas 1485, when the two brothers were evidently appointed yeomen of the crown.\(^4\) Both appear in a list of yeomen of the crown in 'A Declaration made to King Henry VIII by Sir John Cutte, under-treasurer of the Exchequer, of all Fees, Wages and Annuities paid at the Exchequer 24 Henry VII',\(^5\) and both were listed as yeomen of the Guard receiving livery of cloth for the funeral of Henry VII in May 1509.\(^6\)

John Aimer's name does not appear on the lists examined of yeomen of the Chamber receiving livery of cloth for watching clothing, but he was described as a yeoman usher of the Chamber in June 1513 when he was granted the office of bailiff, during pleasure, of the lordship of Wellington-under-Wrekin, Salop., from the first day of the reign.\(^7\) In November 1513 he was appointed a sergeant at arms with 12d. a day, to take effect from the previous Easter,\(^8\) his fee of the crown then being granted to John Jackson, yeoman of the Guard, from 8 June.\(^9\) His name appears on two official lists of sergeants at arms included in personnel of the royal household dating from the mid-1520s.\(^10\)

1. Bindoff, i, p.313.
5. BL Stowe Ms. 146.
6. LC 2/1, f.123r.
7. LP I, 4191; LP I ii, 2055 (36).
8. LP I, 4555; LP I ii, 2484 (18).
9. LP I, 4189.
10. SP 1/37, f.76r; LP IV i, 1939 (9) and 1939 (8).
John Almer married Catherine, daughter of Philip Egerton of Egerton, Cheshire. He second son, Edward, sat in Parliament for Denbighshire in 1555. He was almost certainly the John Almer of Gresford, Denbigh and Flint whose will was proved in 1524.

William Almer

William Almer, brother of John as shown above, is mentioned in an account of deliveries from the Great Wardrobe in 1489 as a yeoman of the crown and Chamber receiving allowance of cloth for watching. He appears on the Chamber list of 1496 as a yeoman. On 12 March 1495 William Almer and a Godfrey Alee were jointly granted the keepership of the park of Merseley in the lordship of Bromefeld, forfeited by Sir William Stanley, deceased, with wages of 2d. daily from the issues of the lordship. Almer received the office of keeper of the little park of Denbigh on 7 December 1499, and an office 'called in Welsh Ynad' in the lordship of Denbigh on 9 October 1500. He received a new patent, for himself alone, on 13 October 1509, as keeper of Merseley park, and on 29 March 1511 was appointed bailiff of the townships of Burton and Alynton in the lordship of Bromefeld.

Almer was appointed a sergeant at arms with 12d. a day vice Robert Washington, deceased, on 26 September 1517, when his fee of the crown was granted to John David, yeoman of the crown. On 5 May 1520 he surrendered his patent of 7 December 1499, and Peter Motton, yeoman of the Guard, was appointed keeper of the little park of Denbigh, with 2d. a day and grant of 'le Countesse Tower' there, which was occupied by William Almer for a lodge.

On 2 August 1529 Almer was granted, in survivorship with Thomas Grey, yeoman of the Guard, the keepership of Grove park, Warwick, vice Sir William Compton. This had been granted in October 1528 to Thomas Grey alone. On 20 August 1529 the keepership of

1. Bindoff, i, p.313.
2. Ibid.
3. PRO PROB 11/21 (27 Bodfelde).
4. E101/413/1; Campbell, ii, p.499.
5. E101/414/8, f.53.
7. Ibid., p.188.
8. Ibid., p.221.
9. LP I, 572; LP I i, 218 (29).
10. LP I, 1567; LP I i, 731 (45).
11. LP II ii, 3698.
12. Ibid., 3699.
13. LP III i, 854 (5).
14. LP IV iii, 5906 (2).
15. LP IV ii, 4896 (28).
Merseley park, and a messuage near the park, was granted to William Brereton, groom of the Privy Chamber, vice William Almer.1

Almer had died by 4 February 1535, when his fee of 12d. a day was granted to William Clerke, another sergeant at arms.2

John Amadas

The published pedigrees of the Amadas family contain several variations among the generations but all show John Amadas as the son of William Amadas, who is described as a sergeant at arms to Henry VIII.3 While no other evidence has been found to support the statement that William Amadas was one of the sergeants at arms, John himself had been appointed to this office by December 1529.4 In one pedigree William Amadas’s wife, John’s mother, is shown as Margaret Hawkins.5 All the pedigrees indicate that William Amadas bore arms, which are described as Azure, a chevron ermine between three oaken slips acomed proper.6 Burke attributes these arms to Amadas of Plymouth7 in accordance with the manuscript sources. A more recent writer, C. R. Humphery-Smith, describes them as being also for Amades or Amadas of London and showing the name ‘Robert’,8 obviously referring to the goldsmith of that name who became master of the Jewelhouse to Henry VIII. It seems almost certain that there was a family connection of some sort, but the evidence is missing and no relationship has been established between the yeoman of the Guard and the goldsmith, though both had fathers named William. Robert Amadas was a son of the goldsmith William Amadas whose will of 1491 named his sons Robert, John, Thomas and William.9 The elder William’s brother John Amadas, also a goldsmith, mentioned his nephew Robert Amadas in his will, proved in 1490,10 and Robert himself died in 1532, leaving a widow and two daughters.

2. LP VIII, 291 (9).
It is not known when John Amadas, the yeoman of the Guard, was born, but in 1500 he was associated with his father in a legal case. He apparently married twice, the name of his first wife being unrecorded. His second wife was Elizabeth, daughter of Anthony Buttockshide or Butshide, of St. Budeaux, Devon, widow of one Trevosper or Trevasper. He had at least two sons, William and Robert, and two daughters, Margaret and Agnes. Robert was evidently still very young when John Amadas made his will in 1546, since the elder son, William, was instructed therein to maintain his brother Robert while at school. Robert would therefore appear to be a son of John's second marriage. By this time also, his two daughters were married.

Early in Henry VIII's reign John Amadas was involved in a dispute with the churchwardens and parishioners of Tavistock, which he eventually referred to the Court of Requests. The dispute arose over the provision of a new silver and gilt cross for the parish church of St. Eustace, Tavistock, which Amadas bought in London and for which he alleged it had been agreed that in return he should have the old silver cross and a sum of money. A former churchwarden of the time corroborated that this was the agreement made by the greater part of the substantial men of the parish. A new churchwarden, however, declared that he knew nothing of any such agreement, which he stated must have been made between a few parishioners only and was unauthorized. The matter was further complicated by the fact that the old silver cross was deficient in that it did not contain the full amount of sterling silver which had originally been supplied by the warden and parishioners to John Bulwyke of Plymouth, and was therefore worth £10 less than had been supposed. The outcome of the case is not known. At the time, however, Amadas was described as a yeoman in the king's bodyguard, living at 'Court Yatte', which may possibly have been the Great Gate of the outer court of Tavistock Abbey.

1. Bindoff, i, p.317.
2. BL Harley Ms. 3288, f.173 (renumbered); Bindoff, i, p.316.
3. Drake, p.xxii; Vivian, p.12, except that John's daughter Margaret is shown as his sister.
4. PRO PROB 11/3 7 (31 More).
6. The date of this case is given as 1519 in Select Cases in the Court of Requests 1497-1569, pp.17-19, which is disputed in Bindoff, i, p.317, footnote 4. But see Sir Walter S. Prideaux, Memorials of the Goldsmiths' Company, 1 (1896), p.42, where under the year 1519 it is stated that six assays were taken of a silver cross brought in to Hall by John Bulwyke of Plymouth, which cross was made for the parish of Tavistock.
7. Radford, p.130.
By 1515 Amadas was of sufficient standing to be elected to Parliament as one of the two members for Tavistock. He may also have represented the borough in the 1512 parliament, if Henry VIII’s request in 1515 for the re-election of previous members was obeyed, and possibly in other years for which the names of members are lost.

John Amadas was described as a yeoman of the Guard when he was granted the fee of the crown of 6d. a day and the controllership of the stannaries of the duchy of Cornwall on 22 July 1517. In October of that year he received payments from the treasurer of the Chamber for the hire of a house to store the rich coats of the Guard. He was a commissioner for the collection of the subsidy in Devon in 1523 and 1524, at which time he was living in the Fore Street of Tavistock and was among the wealthiest inhabitants. He was himself assessed on land worth £13. 6s. 8d. in the borough of Tavistock, while William Amadas senior, presumably his father, was assessed on goods of £50. At the time of the 1543 subsidy, John Amadas was assessed on land worth £40.

In December 1526, described as a yeoman of the crown, he was granted a corrody in the monastery of Tavistock. He appears to have had some enemies, since while on his way to church on 10 November 1528 he was accosted by one John Fitz who, encouraged by others, threatened him with a sword. He was an overseer of the will of Richard Prideaux of Tavistock, proved in 1529.

In the royal accounts for December 1529 John Amadas is referred to as a sergeant at arms. Upon appointment to this office, which was worth 12d. a day, his fee of the crown was granted, on 3 January 1530, to Thomas Mone, a yeoman of the Guard, probably the Thomas Mohun who married his daughter Agnes and later became a sergeant at arms. On 7 August 1530, however, one Griffin Rede was granted the fee of the crown on surrender by Amadas of his patent of 22 July 1517. Possibly Thomas Mohun became a sergeant at arms at that time,

---

1. Ibid., p.163; Bindoff, i, pp.316 and 317.
2. Bindoff, i, p.317.
3. LP II ii, 3501.
4. BL Additional Ms. 21,481, fos. 271r and 280v.
5. LP III ii, 3282 (iii).
6. LP IV i, 547, p.233.
7. Drake, p.xxiii.
10. LP IV ii, 2761 (15).
11. Drake, p.251; Bindoff, i, p.317.
13. LP V, p.316.
14. LP IV iii, 6187 (3).
15. Vivian, p.12; Drake, p.xxii.
16. LP IV iii, 6600 (7).
when a fee of 12d. a day would replace the 6d. a day as fee of the crown. John Amadas continued to find favour and in July 1533, together with Thomas, earl of Wiltshire and Ormond, he was granted the next presentation to the parish church of Calstock, Cornwall.¹

A letter sent by Amadas to Cromwell on 28 January 1534 gives interesting information about his son, who was not named but must have been William Amadas, his eventual heir. In this letter Amadas repeated a request he had made in London, that Cromwell would take his son, the bearer of the letter, into his service.² William had attended Paris University, knew French and Latin, wrote a good hand and had studied the common law, with two years at Lyons Inn. John Amadas stated that he intended to allow his son £10 a year, since he had no other sons. William was evidently betrothed to a young gentlewoman ‘by whom he shall dispense £20 a year’. If Cromwell did not take him into his service, he would go to the Temple and continue his learning.³ Apparently William Amadas was not accepted into Cromwell’s service,⁴ as he was admitted to the Middle Temple at an unknown date.⁵ Possibly Cromwell was cautious in his dealings because the Mistress Amadas who made prophesies against the king and Anne Boleyn may have been John Amadas’s first wife.⁶ In the same letter of 28 January 1534, Amadas referred to his corrody in Tavistock abbey, in which he wished to make his son joint patentee,⁷ and this was evidently granted in due course.⁸

John Amadas had further contact with Cromwell on 30 June 1536, when he communicated statements made by the Abbot of Tavistock criticising the king’s actions in suppressing religious houses, at the time when Sir Thomas Arundel took the abbey on the king’s behalf.⁹ This report seems to have had no immediate effect, since in October 1536 the same Abbot was among those ordered to ‘keep watch to apprehend seditious persons’ after the Pilgrimage of Grace.¹⁰ Nevertheless, Amadas enjoyed grants from Totnes priory in Devon and Launceston priory in Cornwall,¹¹ and on 12 September 1536 was appointed jointly with his son bailiff of the liberty and clerk of the market in Tavistock.¹²

1. LP VI, 929 (48).
2. LP VII, 117.
3. Ibid.
7. LP VII, 117.
9. Ibid., pp.136-137; LP X, 1221.
12. Radford, p.137.
By June 1536 Amadas had become a J.P., serving on the commission of the peace in Devon at least eight times from that date until February 1543.\(^1\) He was also a commissioner for the muster of April 1539 in the Devon hundreds of Lifton, Roborough and Tavistock.\(^2\)

Amadas was a witness in the case against the marquis of Exeter in 1538, when he reported information given to him by John Cornish, the king’s servant, and two others that one Kendal, a servant of the marquis, retained many men for his master.\(^3\) A yeoman of the Guard, John Lytle, also reported Kendal’s statement that the marquis had sent for men to the country.\(^4\)

In the parish records of Tavistock for 1538-9 John Amadas appears as receiving two payments - 46s 8d ‘paid to Mr Sergeant Amadas for the fine of Jele’s land at Peterstavy which he paid to the same Jele for the Church, and 12s paid to ‘the said Mr Sergeant’ for lead.\(^5\)

After becoming a freeman at Launceston, Cornwall, during 1542-3, Amadas settled there, becoming mayor of the town, where he had ancient family connections, in 1545.\(^6\)

Although obviously active in his home territory, Amadas found time to attend at court, receiving quarterly wages of 45s. 6d. for at least one quarter during the years 1538 to 1542 and in 1545.\(^7\) He made his will on 6 October 1546, and probate was granted on 30 August 1555\(^8\) but his date of death is not known. His will mentions his wife Elizabeth, his sons William and Robert, and William’s children, as well as his cousin William Hawkins of Plymouth and sons in law John Charles and John Sawle.\(^9\)

John ap Guilliam

John ap Guilliam appears as a yeoman usher on lists of yeomen of the Chamber for 1 December 1508, 8 November 1509, and 13 December 1510.\(^10\) He received livery of black cloth as a yeoman of the Guard for Henry VII’s funeral in May 1509.\(^11\) Although his name appears on the Chamber list for January 1512,\(^12\) he had been appointed to the office of a sergeant at \(^1\) LP X, 1256 (53); LP XIII i, 1519 (30); LP XIV i, 1354 (24); LP XV, 282 (33); Ibid., 942 (75); LP XVI, 580 (90); LP XVIII i, 226 (30); LP XX i, 662, p.317.

\(^2\) LP XIV i, 652, M.4, p.267.

\(^3\) LP XIII ii, 961, p.399.

\(^4\) Ibid.

\(^5\) R. N. Worth, Calendar of the Tavistock Parish Records (Plymouth, 1887), p.19

\(^6\) Bindoff, i, p.317.

\(^7\) Lady Quarter 1538:- LP XIII ii, 1280, p.528, citing (BL) Arundel Ms. 97, f.10; Lady Quarter 1539:- LP XIV ii, 781, p.307, citing (BL) Arundel Ms. 97, f.67; Lady Quarter 1540:- LP XVI, 380 (indexed as 350), p.185, citing (BL) Arundel Ms. 97, f.124b; Lady Quarter 1541:- LP XVI, 1489, p.705, citing (BL) Arundel Ms. 97, f.181; Midsummer Quarter 1542:- LP XVII, 880, p.478, citing (BL) Stowe Ms. 554, f.118; Christmas Quarter 1545:- LP XX ii, 1035, p.515, citing (BL) Additional Ms. 27,404, f.19.

\(^8\) PRO PROB 11/37 (31 More).

\(^9\) Ibid.

\(^10\) E101/416/7, unfoliated; E101/417/3, fos.33 and 57.

\(^11\) LC 2/1, f.122v.

\(^12\) E101/417/6, f.54.
arms by 8 November 1511, when he was granted the fee of 12d. a day pertaining to that office, vice Lionel Crayford, deceased.\(^1\) His name is included, however, in the list of sergeants at arms appointed by Henry VII, under the heading 'Fees and Annuities paid by the King';\(^2\) and in both the lists of sergeants at arms shown in 'The King's servants in wages' and 'Servants of the King with their yearly wages'.\(^3\)

In February 1512 John ap Guilliam was paid 6s. 8d. by the treasurer of the Chamber for his expenses in 'riding twice to my Lord Rochester'.\(^4\) He was admitted to Lincoln's Inn, by special permission, on 12 July 1514,\(^5\) and on 30 October of the same year he was granted the reversion of the corrody in the monastery of Malmesbury which was then held by one John Wilkinson.\(^6\) John ap Guilliam was holding this corrody in 1529, when a groom of the Chamber was granted the reversion.\(^7\) In November 1514 he was one of the sergeants at arms who each received the sum of 100s., or £5, for wages while going to the West Riding, North Riding and Lincolnshire with the king's letters for the subsidy.\(^8\)

John ap Guilliam was appointed chief steward of the lordship of Fownhope, Herefordshire, on 6 September 1516, surrendering the patent for a fresh one dated 22 November 1530 to include his son John, page of the Chamber, in survivorship.\(^9\)

In June 1534, with four other magistrates, he examined a 'madman' who publicly expressed the hope that Katherine of Aragon would be queen again.\(^10\) He was a commissioner for tenths and spiritualities for Herefordshire and the city of Hereford in January 1535;\(^11\) and sat on the commission of the peace for Herefordshire in July 1540, March 1541, February 1543, and in 1543-4.\(^12\) In October 1542 John ap Guilliam was on the commission of gaol delivery for Hereford gaol,\(^13\) and he served as escheator for the county in 1536 and 1541-2.\(^14\)

He was one of the sergeant at arms in attendance 'with their maces' at the funeral of Queen Jane Seymour in November 1537.\(^15\) At the time of the northern rebellion of 1536 he was included among the gentlemen in Herefordshire who were appointed 'to attend upon the

\(^{1}\) LP I, 1952; LP I i, 969 (26).

\(^{2}\) LP II i, 2736, p.876.

\(^{3}\) LP IV i, 1939 (8) and 1939 (9).

\(^{4}\) LP II ii, The King's Book of Payments, p.1454.

\(^{5}\) Bindoff, ii, p.265; The Records of the Honorable Society of Lincoln's Inn, 2 vols. (1896), i, p.36.

\(^{6}\) LP I, 5536; LP II i, 3408 (40).

\(^{7}\) LP IV iii, 6072 (5).

\(^{8}\) LP II i, 3614, War Expenses, p.1514.

\(^{9}\) LP II i, 2345; LP IV iii, 6751 (24).

\(^{10}\) LP VII, 802.

\(^{11}\) LP VIII, 149 (39).

\(^{12}\) LP XV, 942 (39); LP XVI, 678 (15); LP XVIII i, 226 (84); LP XX i, 622, p.317.

\(^{13}\) LP XVII, 1012 (35).

\(^{14}\) Bindoff, ii, p.269; see LP XXI ii, 773 (ii), p.430.

\(^{15}\) LP XII ii, 1060, p.373; Dunche (2), p.101.
king's own person', supplying six men.\textsuperscript{1} For the muster of 1544, to mobilize an army against France, John ap Guilliam was one of the gentlemen of Herefordshire able to provide soldiers,\textsuperscript{2} and he was evidently in the vanguard of the army, with two horsemen and 30 footmen.\textsuperscript{3}

John ap Guilliam was returned to Parliament as junior knight for Herefordshire in 1547.\textsuperscript{4} He was apparently the son of David Gwillim of Lawstone in Llangarron, and married Joan, daughter of Robert Powell of Whitchurch, by whom he had four sons and five daughters.\textsuperscript{5} His home was at Fawley, in the lordship of Fownhope, where his grandson Thomas was later to build Fawley Court.\textsuperscript{6}

John ap Guilliam survived into the reign of Edward VI. In December 1550 he was a commissioner in Herefordshire to collect the relief granted to Edward VI by Parliament in 1547-8\textsuperscript{7} and, as his name appears on the list of Members of Parliament revised in January 1552, he presumably attended the final session which took place then. No will has been located and the date of his death is unknown. His eldest son John died in 1560, an inquisition for November that year showing that the family held no land in chief.\textsuperscript{8}

It is likely that John ap Guilliam was related to Thomas ap Guilliam, yeoman of the Guard, particularly as both had a grant in the lordship of Fownhope, Herefordshire.

James ap Jenkin

The name of James ap Jenkin(s) is included in lists of yeomen of the Chamber receiving livery of cloth for watching clothing dated 1 December 1508, 8 November 1509, 13 December 1510, and 8 January 1512.\textsuperscript{9} By the time of the next available list of 18 December 1514 he had been appointed yeoman usher.\textsuperscript{10}

He received livery of black cloth as a yeoman of the Guard for the funeral of Henry VII in May 1509.\textsuperscript{11} It is likely that he was the James ap Jenkins included in those listed under 'An Account of the Charges on Margaret, late Countess of Richmond's lands - Fees and annuities payable to the following persons'.\textsuperscript{12}

\begin{itemize}
  \item \textsuperscript{1} LP XI, 580, p.233.
  \item \textsuperscript{2} LP XIX i, 273, p.153.
  \item \textsuperscript{3} Ibid., 274, p.158.
  \item Bindoff, ii, p.269.
  \item Ibid., citing Vis. Herefs. ed. Weaver, 34-35, and Williams, Herefs. MPs, 38.
  \item Ibid.
  \item Bindoff, ii, p.270; CPR Edward VI, v, p.354.
  \item Bindoff, ii, p.270.
  \item E101/416/7, unfoliated; E101/417/3, fos.33 and 57; E101/417/6, f.54.
  \item E101/418/5, f.27.
  \item LC 2/1, f.123r.
  \item LP I, 235.
\end{itemize}

- 190 -
James ap Jenkin also appears in a list c.1516 of yeomen of the crown receiving the crown fee of 6d. a day by grant of Henry VII. His name is included in further lists c.1523-6, one of yeomen ushers and another of yeomen of the crown.

On 3 July 1514 James ap Jenkin received a grant, in survivorship with William Butler, sergeant at arms, of tenements in Westminster Palace called Paradise and Hell, with lands and tenements held by one James Fryes; a house called Purgatory in the same Hall and a house called Potans house, under the Exchequer; the tower and house called le Grenelates; and the keepership of the said Palace. In addition he received two grants of office: on 24 November 1516 he was appointed bailiff of the lordship and keeper of the manor of Sampford Peverell, Devon, and on 13 November 1521 he became a ‘ragler’, or regulator, in co. Cardigan, South Wales, vice Sir Griffith Rice, deceased. This last office was granted jointly to Jenkin with John Wogan, gentleman usher, in survivorship, on 18 August 1524.

Jenkin was too ill to carry out his duties for some months from October 1517. In March 1518, described as yeoman usher of the Chamber, he was paid 61s., as a reward from the king, representing wages for 122 days at 6d. the day, from 15 October 1517 to 16 February 1518, during which time he had been ‘sore sick and diseased’.

In 1522 Jenkin was captain of the Anne of the Tower, one of the ships ‘appointed to keep the passage between Calais and Dover and so from the mouth of the Thames to the Camber’. He was still described as captain of this ship in May 1523, when given protection for John Story, haberdasher, and Richard Story, fishmonger, to join him.

Jenkin died before 4 June 1529, when two other yeomen ushers of the Chamber, Griffith Rede and Piers Motton, were appointed to the office of ‘raglership constabulary’ of co. Cardigan. On 5 June his crown fee was granted to Adam Holland, yeoman of the Guard, and he was described as deceased in the patent of 9 June to Robert Hogan, head cook for the mouth, granting him tenements in Westminster Palace, etc.

1. LP II i, 2736, p.876.
2. LP IV i, 1939 (8).
3. SP 1/37, f.77v; LP IV i, 1939 (9).
4. LP I i, 3107 (3).
5. LP II i, 2594.
6. LP III ii, 1818 (13).
7. LP IV iii, 612 (18), second 18.
9. LP III ii, 2296 (2).
10. Ibid., 3062 (4).
11. LP IV iii, 5748 (4), third 4.
12. Ibid., 5748 (5), third 5.
13. Ibid., 5748 (9).
Jenkin's will (where his name is shown as James ap Jankyng) was dated merely 1529, and he requested burial in Christ Church, London. He bequeathed all of his goods at 'Stondlok' except his clothes to his wife, who is not named, together with items at Sampford Peverell, as well as six silver spoons and a gold ring with a ruby. To 'a little wench that was given me named Thomasin' he bequeathed four kine with their calves, all the wheat and malt that he had at Sampford, three acres of barley, various pans and plates, as well as 30s. in money. Many bequests of garments were made, including his best bonnet with brooch and aiguillets of gold to Mathew Philip, his green coat with aiguillets and a doublet of fustian with velvet points to David Morgan, a coat and velvet doublet with sleeves and plagard of cloth of gold to Walter Hargest, and a leather doublet with sleeves and plagard of russet velvet to Henry Vincent. In addition he left to David Nasshe his sword, buckler, and a doublet of satin and velvet, and to his cousin Maurice Wogan his halbert and a knife. Bequests were also made to the parish churches of Stondlok and Sampford Peverell. Witnesses to the will included Piers Motton (undoubtedly the yeoman of the Guard who benefited from the grant mentioned above) and John Holland, who may also have been one of the Guard. Probate was granted on 21 June 1529.

Lewis ap Rice

The name of Lewis ap Rice occurs in many varieties of spelling, but the more modern version is adopted here.

Lewis ap Rice was probably already a yeoman of the Guard when he was granted offices on 24 September 1485. These offices were keeper of Hanslope park for life, and bailiff of the lordship there during pleasure; and bailiff of the lordship of Blisland, Cornwall, during pleasure. He received a saving in these positions in the Act of Resumption, where he was described as a yeoman of the crown. In February 1488 he was appointed as one of the porters of Dover castle, 'in consideration of his services rendered at his own expense to the king'.

On 25 April 1492 Lewis ap Rice made an indenture with Henry VII to supply one archer, himself, on horseback, eight archers on foot 'garnished as they ought to be', and six bills on foot, for the royal army. They were to muster at Guildford on 27 May, and 6d. a day was to

1. PRO PROB 11/23 (8 Jankyng).
2. Campbell, i, p.4; CPR Henry VII, i, p.4.
3. Campbell, i, p.52.
5. Campbell, ii, p.261; CPR Henry VII, i, p.221.
be paid to all archers and bills. The indenture is subscribed at the foot: 'by your diligent servant Lewis ap Rice, one of your yeomen of the crown.'

As Lewis Aprisse he was among the yeomen of the Guard receiving livery of black cloth for the funeral of Henry VII in May 1509. He sued for a pardon early in Henry VIII's reign, when he was described as Lewis Apprice or App Ryce, bailiff of Hanslope, Bucks., yeoman of the crown.

He was involved in two cases of enclosure in Buckinghamshire which were investigated in a general enquiry of 1517-18.

The family of Lewis ap Rice has not been positively traced. He died at an unknown date before 13 July 1523, when Sir Francis Bryan was appointed bailiff of Hanslope and parker there. He left a widow, Agnes, who was granted a 49 years' lease of Boycott manor, Stowe, by the abbot of Biddlesden in 1526. Before 1529, however, her rent was in arrears, and the abbot brought an action against her; but at the Dissolution, when the manor became crown property, Agnes ap Rice still held the unexpired lease.

Lewis ap Watkin

Lewis ap Watkin was described as one of the yeomen of the Guard in April 1532, when granted the reversion of 6d. a day as the fee of the crown on the first vacancy to arise from 1 March 1532. He received this fee from 8 February 1533, paid from the revenues of the duchy of Cornwall, on the death of Griffin Rede.

As a yeoman, or possibly yeoman usher, of the Chamber, he was appointed to attend Queen Anne Boleyn at her coronation in 1533, being a 'servitor from the dresser' waiting upon the Lord Mayor of London at the coronation feast.

In July 1540 Lewis ap Watkin was described as a yeoman of the Guard and crown when granted the reversion of the office of a sergeant at arms with a fee of 12d. a day. His appointment to this office had taken place by 4 March 1542, when his former fee of 6d. a day was granted to William Carvanall, yeoman of the crown.

1. LC 2/1, f.123r.
2. LP I, 438 (1), p.207 (m.8).
3. Leadam, i, pp.196 and 209.
4. LP III ii, 3214 (13).
6. Ibid.; see also LP XVIII ii, 107 (55).
8. LP VI, 196 (16).
11. LP XV, 942 (60).
12. LP XVII, 220 (13).
On 8 March 1543 Lewis ap Watkin, sergeant at arms, was appointed receiver and bailiff of the lordship of Carew, county Pembroke, South Wales, arising from the attainder of Lady Dawbeney, countess of Bridgewater, for which his fee was £4 annually. He received a further grant of offices on 3 January 1545, when appointed customer of the ports of Pembroke and Tenby, Pembroke, and of the port of Haverfordwest, Pembroke; butler and ‘silaginarius’ in those ports; and bailiff of the lordship of Rowse, in the lordship of Haverfordwest. On the same day he was also appointed escheator for Brecknock, or Brecon.

In the records of the musters taken for the army in preparation for the war with France in 1544, Lewis ap Watkin is shown as a gentleman able to supply soldiers in both Brecknock and Pembroke.

As Lewis Watkins he was elected to represent Pembroke Boroughs in Parliament in January 1545. This Parliament, which was first summoned to meet in January, was postponed to the following November, and it is not known whether Watkin in fact ever sat in the House of Commons. During the intervening months he was in Wales, where he was convicted for being an accessory to a murder in August. It appears that he was in company with three others when they attacked Roger ap Watkin, yeoman, late of Llangorse, who died from an injury inflicted with an arrow by Watkin ap Philip. On 2 October 1545 the Privy Council sent a message to the Council of Wales to ‘stay the execution of Lewes ap Watkin and two others for murder’, and the next day the Privy Council noted the King’s pleasure for the pardoning of Lewes ap Watkin and others. Nine days later, on 12 October, Watkin, with two others, received a pardon for his part in the crime, signed by Norfolk, Russell, Gardiner, Cheyne, Gage, Paget and Wingfield. All three pardoned were described as ‘late of Llangorse’, Brecon. No relationships are stated between the individuals involved.

The widow of the murdered man did not allow the matter to rest, however, as the Privy Council was informed six months later by the Council for Wales. In replying to this... information in May 1546, the Privy Council stated that ‘his Majesty’s pleasure was that by such good means as they [the Council for Wales] could best devise they should see her pacified, and to stay the matter from proceeding to any further issue, so as the woman may be contented, and yet the law not seem to be impeached’. It is not known what financial considerations may have been involved in securing Watkin’s pardon.

On 29 June 1546 Watkin and his wife Isabella were granted livery of certain lands, together with Thomas Verne (or Verney) and Alice his wife, and Humphrey Stafford and Margaret his wife, the three women being daughters and co-heirs of Sir Edmund Tame, deceased.

Watkin appears in a list of sergeants at arms dating from November 1546. His name is also shown in the list of yeomen of the Chamber receiving quarterly wages at the rate of 6d. a day in December 1545, but this is clearly an error, unless it refers to another person.

On 7 December 1547 Watkin made his will, in which he described himself as ‘Lewys ap Watkin Esquire Sergeant at Arms to our sovereign lord the king, of Upton in the County of Pembroke, being sick in body but in perfect mind and memory’, and directed that he should be buried at Nash, which is near Upton. He bequeathed the bulk of his estate to his wife ‘Isabell Tame’, his sole executrix, leaving it to her discretion to provide suitably for his three sons, William, James and Thomas, and his daughter Katherine. Besides lands at Llangorse he left a substantial stock of cattle, oxen and sheep, all listed in detail. His sergeant’s mace was bequeathed to his son William, evidently the eldest. Probate was granted to his widow on 6
May 1548.

Roger Becke

Roger Becke’s family has not been traced. Pedigrees exist for families called Beck or Beke in Dorset and Buckinghamshire, but the name of Roger does not appear. There was a family of Becke also in Lancashire, and in Berkshire a Thomas Beke, described as king’s servant, was nephew of John Beke, a bailiff of Reading in 1536. Possibly Roger Becke was connected with

1. Ibid.; LP XXI i, 769; Dasent’s A.P.C., 411.
2. Bindoff, iii, p.558.
3. LP XXI i, 1166 (67).
4. LP XXI ii, 476 (69).
5. LP XX, 1035, p.517, citing BL Additional Ms. 27,404, f.32.
7. J. P. Rylands, ed., The Visitation of the County of Dorset taken in the year 1623, Harleian Society, 20 (1885),
9. VCH Lancashire, iv.
10. LP XI, 1231.
one of these families. In his later years he had dealings in the duchy of Lancaster, though this may have been influenced through his wife's family. The only certain information available about his family connections is that he married Mabel, second daughter of Sir Lawrence Warren of Pointon, Baron of Stockport, and his wife Margaret, daughter of Sir Piers Ligh or Legh of Lyme.1

The name of Roger Becke appears (as Roger Beeke) in the accounts of the treasurer of the Chamber in the late summer and autumn of 1503, when he received payments for riding on the king's business.2 He received livery of cloth as a yeoman of the Guard for the funeral of Henry VII in May 1509,3 and as a yeoman for the interment of the infant Prince Henry in February 1511.4 As a yeoman of the Chamber, Roger Becke received livery of cloth for watching clothing, appearing on the lists for 1 December 1508, 8 November 1509, 13 December 1510, and 8 January 1512.5 By 18 December 1514, the date of the next available list, he was a yeoman usher.6

On 10 May 1513 Becke was described as a yeoman of the Guard when he was granted the crown fee of 6d. a day.7 His name is included in a list of yeomen of the crown receiving the fee by grant of Henry VIII headed ‘Fees and Annuities paid by the King’,8 and in another headed ‘The King's servants in wages’ he is shown as a yeoman usher.9 In June 1518 Becke received wages for 141 days at 6d. a day, from the previous 29 November to 19 April.10

Roger Becke was appointed to the office of one of the king's sergeants at arms on 10 October 1523, with 12d. a day, ‘in consideration of his services to Henry VII and Henry VIII’,11 and he appears as a sergeant at arms in the list ‘Servants of the King with their yearly wages’,12 as well as in further lists from December 1536 to December 1540.13

Little is known of Becke's activities and he does not appear to have attracted grants of office. However, in November 1532 he was one of four commissioners appointed to call together the parties involved in a dispute over land ownership, the case being heard in the

2. BL Additional Ms. 59,899, fos. 28v and 36v.
3. LC 2/1, f.123r.
4. LC 2/1, f.171r; LP I i, 707, p.382.
5. E101/416/7, unfoliated; E101/417/3, fos.33 and 57; E101/417/6, f.54.
6. E101/418/5, f.27.
7. LP I, 4045; LP I ii, 1948 (51).
8. LP II i, 2736, p.876.
9. LP IV i, 1939 (9).
10. E36/216, f.40r.
11. LP III ii, 3495 (10).
12. SP 1/37, f.75r; LP IV i, 1939 (9).
13. LP XI, 1417 (23) and (25); LP XIII i, 1115 (33); LP XVI, 107 (21), 220 (40) and 379 (37).
Lancaster Duchy Court. A few years later, during Hilary term 1540, a complaint was made to the Duchy Court by Edmond Lowde, the gaoler of Clitheroe castle, concerning the rights attached to his office. His evidence included the information that Roger Becke, sergeant at arms, had demised to him the gaolership or portership of the castle and two pieces of ground known as the Castle dykes and the Castle hill, which all preceding gaolers had occupied, and the former of which was now being claimed by another person.

The date of Becke's death is unknown, and no will has been located.

Henry Birde

Henry Birde was a grandson of Philip Birde of Eltham whose will of 19 September 1497 was proved in Rochester. Philip Birde's will directed that his wife Joan should have the choice of the best of his three tenements in Eltham for life, and that his lands and farms in Kent should be equally divided between his two sons Robert and Thomas Birde. Henry Birde, the yeoman of the Guard, was one of the three sons of this Thomas Birde, by Elizabeth his wife.

When Thomas Birde died, his will of 27 January 1503 settled on his wife Elizabeth the house in which his son-in-law, Harry Pemberton, dwelt; and his lands and tenements were bequeathed equally between his sons, Ralph, John and Harry (Henry), with remainder in default to his daughters, Margaret, Joan and Agnes.

Henry Birde therefore descended from a well-established land-owning family in Kent. By his wife Anne he had two sons, George and Henry and four daughters, Elizabeth, Thomasin, Julian and Margaret. It is likely that the Robert Birde of Eltham, king's sergeant, who sat as M.P. for Rye in 1449-50 was of this family.

It is not known when Birde entered royal service, but he is described as a yeoman usher ordinary in a book of names of all the king's officers and servants admitted and sworn to attend in 'his graces most honourable chamber', which has been calendared as 1516 in the Letters and Papers volumes of Henry VIII's reign. He served in the garrison at Tournai, and was one of the yeomen of the Guard described as 'vinteners of the castle of Tournai' who signed a 6. PRO PROB 11/31 (F6 Alen).

8. LP II i, 2735, p.873, citing Royal Ms. 7F XIV.100 BM.
letter to Wolsey and the king’s council in May 1518, protesting against the proposal to pay their wages half-yearly like other garrisons, instead of quarterly.¹

The reasons why their position differed from those serving in other garrisons were stated:
‘they must always be ready to stand a siege; English victuallers are discouraged; several have run away, leaving large debts; are not exempt, like other garrisons, from the ‘maletot’ but pay 40s. on a tun of wine and 12d. on a barrel of beer.’² In addition, the king’s money did not buy as much there as elsewhere. A similar letter was sent by the yeomen of the Guard who were ‘constables’ at Tournai.³

After returning to this country Birde may have joined Princess Mary’s household, since a note of her expenses for three years ending 1519-20 includes the name of Henry Berde on a list of people to whom payments were made.⁴ The name of Thomas Tilly also appears in this list, and he was a joint grantee with Henry Birde in February 1516,⁵ so it seems likely that both were royal servants.

When the Emperor Charles V visited England in 1522, accommodation had to be found for his large retinue upon arrival, and Birde’s dwelling in Greenwich was one of the many used for this purpose, housing six persons.⁶ It is recorded that twelve yeomen of the Guard accompanied the king to Dover on the occasion of the Emperor’s visit.⁷

In 1525 Birde was described as a yeoman of the Guard when he witnessed the will of Thomas Sibson, of which the overseer was Ralph Birde, presumably his brother.⁸

Henry Birde held the office of yeoman of the bows, for which he received an annual fee of £3. 6s. 8d.⁹ This office involved the receipt of money from the treasurer of the Chamber to pay bills for equipment. In December 1528, for instance, he was given £21.11s. 4d. to pay William Pikeman and William Buckstede, the king’s bowyers, for supplying bows, arrows, strings, forked heads and quivers, etc., for the use of the king and his natural son, the duke of Richmond;¹⁰ and in November 1530 he received £18.18s. 8d. to cover the cost of bows, arrows, bracers, shooting gloves and quivers for the king’s own use.¹¹ In addition, he was paid 4d. a

¹. LP II ii, 3321, citing Calig. E.II. 146 BM. NB: the editors of LP calendar this as 1517; for fuller account see Cruickshank, Tournai, p.101, footnote 2, and p.102, footnote 2.
². Ibid.
³. LP II ii, 3322; J. Strype, Ecclesiastical Memorials, i, pp.7-9, and Appendix IV; Cruickshank, Tournai, p.285.
⁴. LP Addenda, i i, 259, citing S.P. Henry VIII 232, f.159.
⁵. LP XV, 144 (7).
⁶. Drake, p.58, n.11; Rutland Papers, p.83.
⁷. Rutland Papers, p.81.
¹⁰. LP V, p.306, treasurer of Chamber’s Accounts; Drake, p.230, citing Trevelyan Papers 145, Camden Society - amount given as £20.11s. 4d.
¹¹. LP V, p.322, treasurer of Chamber’s Accounts; Drake, p.59, footnote 3.
day for 122 days for attending on the king while hunting, from 31 May to 1 October 1530; 1 12s. 8d. for ‘making the rounds [targets] at Totehill’ in January 1531, 2 and 6s. 8d. in August 1532 ‘for making pricks at Ampthill and Grafton’. 3

Birde also held several offices in the duchy of Lancaster. On 17 November 1524 he was appointed for life bailiff of the soke of Wirksworth, 4 and was granted the reversion of the office of barmaster in Wirksworth soke in October 1536 . 5 He was also bailiff of Ashbourne, 6 and in September 1536 he was granted the reversion of the offices of chief steward and bailiff of the manor or lordship of Allerton and Plumtree, Nottinghamshire, and Risley, Derbyshire, with the office of ‘beermeasurer’ in the wapentake of Wirksworth, Derbyshire. 7

There is evidence of some difficulty in carrying out the duties of bailiff at Ashbourne. In October 1534 an unknown writer (who referred to his friend Hugh Willoughby, sergeant at arms) noted that he must speak with Henry Birde, reminding him of correspondence requesting Birde to obtain a letter from the king to ‘my lord’, commanding him to see that he might occupy his office at Ashbourne as other bailiffs had done before. 8 Another letter was mentioned, to all tenants and inhabitants in Ashbourne and Wirksworth, asking them to pay to the bailiff and his deputy the rents and customs due to the king, and to assist him in his office, ‘not letting for Sir Thomas Cokayne nor Sir Henry Sacheverell nor any other’. 9

As well as these offices in the duchy of Lancaster, Henry Birde was favoured with a number of other grants. On 11 November 1530 he was appointed as a keeper of Weybridge forest, Huntingdonshire, with 2d. a day, vice Christopher Alborough, deceased, 10 who was another yeoman of the Guard; and in October 1534, in survivorship with Leonard Thornton, he was granted the farm of the subsidy and ulnage of cloths sold in the city of London, at £24 a year and 12d. increase. 11 This was probably the grant referred to in a catalogue of Thomas Cromwell’s documents as ‘a bill to be signed for Birde of the Guard’. 12 On 4 March 1540 Birde was appointed bailiff of the manors of Shillington and Barton, Bedfordshire, and all lands there which belonged to Ramsey monastery. 13 It is likely that he was the Henry Berd who was

1. Ibid.
2. LP V, p.753, Privy Purse Expenses of Henry VIII.
3. Ibid., p.759.
4. Somerville, i, p.556, citing DL 42/22, f.79.
5. Ibid., p.555, citing DL 41/34/1, f.70v.
6. Ibid.
7. LP XI, 519 (21); see also Somerville, i, p.558, citing DL 30/107/1/1562.
8. LP VII, 1268, Tithes at Chesterfield.
9. Ibid.
10. LP IV iii, 6751 (11) (second numbered 11), name of place and county as corrected on p.3537.
11. LP VII, 1352 (1).
12. LP VI, 299, p.132; see also LP VII, 923 (xx), p.346.
granted jointly with Thomas Tilly the office of water-bailiff of the river Thames between the bridge of Staines and the head of the river, by patent of 1 February 1516, which was surrendered on 16 January 1540.¹

Like many other royal servants, Henry Birde was involved in diverse activities, both within and outside the court. On the occasion of Anne Boleyn’s coronation in 1533 he was nominated to superintend the 'servitors from the dresser' attending upon the mayor of London in the Great Hall, Westminster.² In 1537, together with a Robert Pedle of Edgware, Middlesex, he acted as an informer, reporting that, contrary to the Acts of Parliament (which were quoted), Nicholas Goodeyre of Edgware had continued as clerk to the sheriffs of Middlesex for substantially more than one year.³ Goodeyre incurred a penalty of £600 for his misdemeanour, half of which went to the king and the other half, significantly, to the informers.⁴ Birde was one of five men who received a total of £10.18s. 4d. in April 1540 for their expenses in delivering bills signed by the council.⁵

On 25 October 1542 the king granted lands to Birde as a reward for services.⁶ These lands consisted of Little Bankers (about three acres), Great Hatchfield (about 33 acres), one acre called Bridgehouse land, and a close of 8 acres called Great Wotty, in the parishes of Lewisham and Lee, with an annual rent of 50s.⁷

Henry Birde’s name is included in two lists of yeomen of the Guard dating c.1540-5.⁸ He made his will on 26 June 1544 and had died by 31 March 1545, when probate was granted to his wife and Henry Polsted, his executors.⁹ In his will he describes himself as servant to the king dwelling in Lewisham, Kent, and gives the annual net values of his properties, which total £11. 1s. 8d.:-

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Property</th>
<th>Value</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>House and land in Lewisham</td>
<td>£3. 6s. 8d.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tenements in Greenwich</td>
<td>6. 8s. 4d.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lands in Eltham</td>
<td>1. 6s. 8d.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The properties in Lewisham, which he had ‘of the king’s majesty’s gift’, were bequeathed to his wife Anne for life, with remainder to their younger son, Henry, and his heirs. The Greenwich properties were to be held by the testator’s wife and Henry Polsted, the two executors, until the eldest son, George Birde, reached the age of 21 years ‘and not afore’.

¹.  LP XV, 144 (7).
².  LP VI, 562, p.249.
³.  LP XII ii, 1009.
⁴.  Ibid.
⁵.  LP XVI, 380, p.186, citing King’s Book of Payments, Arundel Ms. 97, f.127.
⁶.  Drake, p.248, citing Pat. 34 Henry VIII p.7, m.17; LP XVII, 1012 (54).
⁹.  PRO PROB 11/31 (6 Alen).
George Birde was also left the remainder of the Eltham lands, in which the testator’s mother had a life interest. A third part of Henry Birde’s estate, to the annual value of £3. 6s. 8d, was entrusted to the king during George Birde’s minority ‘according to the statute’. To each of his daughters, Elizabeth, Thomasin, Julian and Margaret, Henry Birde bequeathed £6.13s. 4d. together with a feather bed and a bolster on marriage.

It is recorded that Henry Birde was commemorated by a brass in Lee church, upon which he was described as a yeoman of the king’s Chamber, but this has not survived.

Robert Brickenden

Robert Brickenden (whose surname appears in many variations of spelling - such as Brikenden, Brekynden, and Brigandyne) was from a family settled at Smallhythe, in the Tenterden area of Kent. Although his parents can not at present be named, it is likely that he was closely related to Robert Brekynden, senior, of Tenterden, whose will was proved in 1483, and Robert Brigenden of Smallhythe, whose will was proved in 1517-18. He may himself have been the Robert Brigenden of Biddenden whose will was proved in 1523.

The earliest reference to Robert Brickenden is on 4 August 1488, when he was one of the commissioners appointed to impress calkers for a ship about to be ‘made anew in the Wold, Kent’. On 15 November 1490, described as a yeoman of the crown, he was granted an annuity of £10, to date from the previous Michaelmas (September 1490). At the same time he was granted for seven years the subsidy and tax on marketable cloths in Kent and a share of the forfeitures of such as were exposed for sale unsealed, rendering £20. 3s. 4d. annually to the king, and £6.10s. 0d. increment.

On 19 May 1495 Brickenden was appointed to the office of keeper or clerk of the king’s ships ‘within the realm and elsewhere’, with 12d. a day for himself and 6d. a day for a clerk under him, to be funded from the customs received in the ports of Exeter and Dartmouth. The grant of office also provided for him to receive 3s. 0d. a day from the same source for every day upon which he rode ‘for the purveyance of goods and necessaries for the said ships

1. Ibid.
4. Ibid., Arch. Reg. 13, f.263.
7. CPR HenryVII, i, p.333.
8. Ibid.
.. for the taking and arresting of ships', upon his taking oath in the Chancery of the number of days involved.¹

The following month after his appointment, he was ordered to superintend the construction of a dry dock at Portsmouth, which was the first known to have been made in England.² It is not known whether Brickenden had any training as an engineer,³ but he must have been considered suitable for the task, and has left it on record that on at least one occasion he received certain orders from the king in person.⁴

In December 1496 Brickenden was one of the commissioners appointed to find ropers in Norfolk and Suffolk to make ropes and rigging.⁵ In January 1497, together with William Barnefeld, yeoman of the crown, he was commissioned to inspect and seize all ships and other vessels found in any ports in Kent and Sussex, and to appoint masters and crew for them, to convey the king's troops towards Scotland. He was also to certify the king and council of the number of such masters and crew.⁶ At about the same time he received several similar commissions relating to Southampton, Dorset and South Devon, with Benedict Weaver, John Monkeley and John Whittington, all yeomen of the crown.⁷

There are numerous references to Brickenden in official records, including the accounts of the treasurer of the Chamber. On 8 December 1503 he was paid £20 for the rigging of the Sovereign⁸ and other payments were made to him for conveying the Sovereign to various places during 1506 and 1507.⁹

Robert Brickenden was listed (as Robert Brekynden) as one of the yeomen of the Guard receiving livery of black cloth for Henry VII's funeral in May 1509.¹⁰ He continued in office as clerk of the king's ships to Henry VIII, receiving a new patent on 28 July 1509.¹¹ On 29 July 1511 he was paid £120 for the conveyance of two new ships, the Mary Rose and the Peter Granade, from Portsmouth to the Thames,¹² and in September of the same year he was paid sums of £30 and £50 for the expenses of the two new ships in the Thames.¹³ Later in the month he received £8. 2s. 6d. for the wages and victualling of the masters, mariners and soldiers, to 26

⁸. BL Additional Ms. 59,899, f.39r.
⁹. E36/214, fos. 55v and 64r.
¹⁰. LC 2/1, f.134r.
¹¹. LP I, 353; LP I i, 132 (101).
September 1511, in the Mary Rose and the Peter Granade, during their conveyance from Portsmouth to the Thames, together with a payment for 35 coats of white and green for the master and 34 of his company, at 6s. 8d. a coat.¹

By October 1511 Brickenden’s son John was assisting him, being described as overseer and ruler of the two ships the Regent and the Sovereign when he was paid £40 by warrant dormant for men’s wages and victuals and safe moorings with cables.² John Brickenden was probably already in the king’s service on 19 November 1510 when, described as son of Robert Brickenden, clerk of the king’s ships, he was granted three tenements with lands, in ruinous condition, in Portsmouth.³

According to a nearly contemporary source, Robert Brickenden designed and built the great ship called the Henry Grace à Dieu.⁴ Expenditure was begun on 4 December 1512, on ‘... lath, reed and loam for making of the long house and houses of office, Robert Brickenden’s chamber, and smiths’ forges, ordained for the making of the King’s great ship called the Harry Grace à Dieu and for the three galleys begun 4 Henry VIII.’⁵

When in May 1515 Brickenden was wanting the sum of £742.12s.11½d., most of which was owed to creditors, Henry VIII ‘not willing the said Robert Brickenden to be endangered for our causes’ signed a warrant to John Heron, treasurer of the Chamber, to pay the amount by indenture to Brickenden forthwith.⁶

On 21 April 1523 Brickenden, described as of Smallhythe, Kent, alias of Portsmouth, was granted a release for all financial irregularities which may have occurred while he was clerk of the king’s ships to Henry VII and Henry VIII.⁷ Possibly he was already ill by then, as nothing more is heard of him after this date and, as already stated, he may have been the Robert Brigenden of Biddenden whose will was proved in 1523. This remains to be investigated.

Geoffrey Bromefeld

Geoffrey Bromefeld was the eldest or eldest surviving son of Tudor Bromefeld of Byn y Wiwer in Bodylltyn, in the old parish of Ruabon, Denbighshire, by his wife Margaret, daughter of Jenkyn ab Y Bedi of Yale.⁸ The family name was derived from the lordship of Bromefield in

1. ibid., p.1497.
2. ibid.
3. LP I, 1327, p.196.
7. LP III ii, 2992 (21).

- 203 -
which Ruabon, near Wrexham, is situated. Geoffrey Bromefeld married Margaret, daughter of Thomas ab Ieuan ab Jenkyn of Ruabon.¹

The earliest appearance of Geoffrey Bromefeld’s name in official records is in January 1529, when an item in the royal accounts shows that he was paid 20s. for a buckler which he gave to the king as a New Year’s present.² Ruabon and, more especially, Wrexham were the main centres in an area where bucklers were made, and it was no doubt this industry which brought Bromefeld to the court, probably as a purveyor rather than a working smith.³ The royal accounts for March 1531 show him as the king’s buckler maker, with wages of 2d. a day, by warrant of 11 February that year,⁴ and his quarterly wages of 15s. 2d. are shown in a number of subsequent accounts up to 1552.⁵

On 1 July 1535 Bromefeld was appointed to the office of clerk of the ‘creeks and passages’ belonging to the town and port of Bristol, with fees of 10 marks a year.⁶ The reversion of this office was granted to John Bromefeld, a yeoman of the Guard, on 26 April 1536.⁷ He was almost certainly a relative, though no indication is given, and he does not appear in the pedigree of the family.

The earliest reference to Geoffrey Bromefeld as a yeoman of the king’s Chamber occurs in April 1539, when he was appointed keeper of the wood in the little park near Chirk castle, with 40s. a year and the herbage and pannage of the wood and park.⁸ In March 1540, described as Geoffrey Bromfeld of Westminster, yeoman of the crown, he was granted a lease for 21 years of the tithes in the manor of Bincknoll, Wiltshire, formerly belonging to the manor of St. Denis by Southampton.⁹ He was described as a yeoman of the Chamber in November 1541 when he was granted the office in survivorship with Geoffrey Jones or Johns, a yeoman of the Guard, of keeper of the county gaols of Ilchester, Somerset, and Dorchester, Dorset.¹⁰

1. Ibid., p. 86.
2. Ibid.
3. Ibid., pp. 85 and 87.
4. LP V, Treasurer of Chamber’s Accounts, p. 324; E101/420/11, f. 156v; Blair, ‘Welsh Bucklers’, p. 86.
5. Blair, ‘Welsh Bucklers’, p. 86, citing PRO E101/424/9, pp. 153-64; see also LP XIII ii, 1280, p. 528, citing BL Arundel Ms. 97, f. 10b; LP XIV ii, 781, p. 307, citing BL Arundel Ms. 97, f. 67; LP XVII, 880, p. 478, citing BL Stowe Ms. 554, f. 18 (see also f. 37v); LP XX ii, 1035, p. 515, citing BL Additional Ms. 27,404, f. 19v; also BL Additional Ms. 59,900, f. 59v. I am grateful to Miss Joan Henderson for informing me of this manuscript.
7. Ibid.
8. LP XIV i, 904 (7); Blair, ‘Welsh Bucklers’, p. 87.
10. LP XVI, 1391 (46); see also LP XII i, 1350 (15); Blair, ‘Welsh Bucklers’, p. 87.
At the muster of 1544 he was one of twelve gentlemen of Denbigh who were able to supply soldiers. A grant to one John Pope dated 3 October 1545 cites numerous properties and lands, including ‘messuages etc. in Thomerton (Tormarton), Gloucestershire, in the tenure of Geoffrey Bromeefelde’. In December 1545 he was one of the yeomen of the Chamber paid at the rate of 4d. a day, which indicates that he was no longer in regular attendance at court but had to be ready to appear if and when summoned. A bill for ‘Jeffrey Bromeefelde of Wales’ dated in May 1546 described him as a gentleman usher when he was granted the gift of the bailiwick of Savoy.

Probably he had returned to live in Wales permanently in about 1544. In November of 1549 and 1550 he was nominated for election to the office of sheriff in Denbigh, though his name was not pricked. In 1551 he served on the Denbigh commission for the collection of the third instalment of relief granted by Parliament to the king in 1547 and in the same year he was escheator for the county. This is the last heard of him until after his death, when the office of park-keeper at Chirk was granted to John Roberts, a yeoman of the queen’s Chamber, on 21 July 1558, ‘which office Geoffrey Bromefeld, deceased, lately held’. He left a son Martin, who married Elizabeth, the only child of William Eyton of Ruabon.

John Bromeefeld

John Bromeefeld was a yeoman of the Guard by May 1531, when he was granted the custody of the person and property of Elizabeth Archer, an idiot. At Anne Boleyn’s coronation in 1533 he was one of the yeomen appointed to attend upon the queen, and was a ‘servitor from the dresser’ attending upon the Barons of the Cinque Ports at the coronation feast held in Westminster Hall. In April 1536 he was granted the reversion of the office of clerk of the creeks and passages belonging to the town and port of Bristol, with fees of 10 marks a year, which office had been granted to Geoffrey Bromeefeld the previous July.

1. LP XIX i, 273, p.156; Blair, ‘Welsh Bucklers’, p.87.
2. LP XX ii, 707 (10); Blair, ‘Welsh Bucklers’, p.87.
3. Ibid., 1035, p.517.
7. Ibid., citing CPR Edward VI, v, p.363.
8. Ibid., citing CPR Edward VI, v, p.375.
9. Ibid., citing CPR Philip and Mary, iv, p.400.
11. LP V, 278 (27).
12. LP VI, 562, p.246, citing (BL) Additional Ms. 21,116.
13. Ibid., p.249.
14. LP X, 777 (7).
Unfortunately, no relationship between the two men is indicated in the patent, but it is virtually certain that they were from the same family, notwithstanding the fact that John Bromefeld is not shown in the pedigree.

In March 1542 he received a grant of several properties: a tenement called Wymarks and Brownes, with lands attached, in Stoke-juxta-Nayland, Suffolk; a tenement called Sares at Mershe, Stoke, with two acres of land; another tenement in Stoke Nayland; and one called Peppes in Layer Bretton, Essex, which belonged to Thomas Abell, priest, attainted.\(^1\)

John Bromefeld is shown as receiving the fee of the crown in a list of the Guard of c.1545.\(^2\) In January 1546 he succeeded John Willesdon as a yeoman usher, which carried a further fee of 3d. a day.\(^3\) It may be that he received the fee from this date after serving in the office for a few years, since the patent of March 1542 described him as a yeoman usher of the Chamber.\(^4\)

The subsidy list for the royal household in 1546 shows that John Bromefeld was assessed at £34 on wages, lands and fees, his contribution of £2.16s. 8d. being payable at a monthly rate of 11s. 4d. over five months.\(^5\)

Bromefeld’s will was proved on 20 August 1556 at Rochester, and mentions his wife Jane, sisters Katherine and Anne, and a nephew David. He was buried in the church at East Greenwich, where he had previously resided.\(^6\)

William Brown

William Brown was among the first to be appointed to Henry VII’s newly-founded bodyguard, being described as a yeoman of the king’s Guard in a patent dated 18 September 1485, granting him, during pleasure, the office of bailiff of Brailes, Warwickshire.\(^7\) He had evidently attended Henry VII before the decisive battle at Bosworth, since his patent shows that the grant was given ‘in consideration of the good service that our humble and faithful subject William Brown, yeoman of our Guard, hath heretofore done unto us, as well beyond the sea as at our victorious journey’.\(^8\) On 2 October 1485 a new patent granted the office for life, and added the keepership of the warren at Brailes.\(^9\) Brown received a safeguard of these offices in Henry VII’s Act of Resumption.\(^10\)

1. LP XVII, 220 (43).
2. LC 5/178, p.50; printed in HO, p.171.
3. LP XXI i, 148 (79); see SP 4/1, Item 79; LP XX ii, 1067/79.
5. E179/69/56.
7. Campbell, i, p.8.
8. Ibid.
9. Ibid., p.70. C82/2 (3), m.434, authorizes this patent.
Little is known about Brown, beyond the facts that he was among the yeomen of the crown who received allowance of russet cloth for ‘watching’ in 1489\(^1\) and that he had died by 9 October 1510, when William Compton, groom of the stool, was appointed to the offices of bailiff and warrener of Brailes, with the farm of the lordship, \textit{vice} William Brown, deceased.\(^2\)

The name of William Brown appears on the list of yeomen of the Chamber receiving livery of cloth for watching clothing dated 8 November 1509.\(^3\) It is also included, however, in the similar lists for 1512\(^4\) and 1514.\(^5\) This is either an error or refers to another of the same name.

The only other information available which can positively be identified as relating to the yeoman of the Guard is the fact that in 1491 William Brown enclosed 192 acres of land in Brailes, involving the abolition of four ploughs and two messuages, as well as the eviction of 16 persons, which was revealed by an inquisition taken in Warwickshire in 1517.\(^6\)

He may have been the William Brown who was on the commission for Rutland which was set up to assess and appoint collectors of the subsidy imposed by the Commons in the Parliament of 9 November 1487,\(^7\) and possibly the J.P. for the same county in March 1486 and August 1487.\(^8\) A William Brown was also on the commission of the peace in Warwickshire in July 1503, December 1506 and July 1507,\(^9\) and a commissioner for gaol delivery at Warwick castle in October 1507.\(^10\) There is a possibility that he may have been the squire for the body who was in attendance at Henry VII’s funeral in May 1509,\(^11\) since his name is not included in the lists of yeomen of the Guard receiving livery of cloth for that event. Nevertheless, this could equally be a different person, especially as the name of William Brown continues to be included on the commission of the peace in Warwickshire on several occasions between 1511 and 1514, after the death of the yeoman of the Guard.\(^12\)

John and William Catcot

Although John Catcot’s parentage cannot be stated with any certainty, it is likely that he was related to the William Catcot described as a yeoman of the crown when he witnessed a

1. Campbell, ii, p.500; E101/413/1.
2. \textit{LP I,} 1257; \textit{LP I,} 604 (13).
4. E101/417/6, f.54.
5. E101/418/5, f.27.
11. \textit{LP I i,} 20, p.16.
will in 1505.¹ This would also be the William Catcot (or Cadcote) who received livery of cloth as a yeoman of the Guard for Henry VII’s funeral in May 1509² and livery for watching clothing in 1511,³ 1512⁴ and 1514.⁵ The John Catcot of Shepton Mallet whose will was proved in 1519 left two sons, Sir John and William, but also mentioned in his will John Catcot senior, John Catcot junior, and William Catcot junior as well as a brother Thomas Catcot.⁶ As will be seen, the yeoman of the Guard was obviously a Somerset man, so that this is almost certainly the family to which he belonged.

John Catcot was a yeoman of the Guard by July 1520, when he was appointed, jointly with Thomas Alford, another yeoman of the Guard, keeper of the county gaols of Somerset and Dorset, at Ilchester and Dorchester respectively.⁷ This office had been vacated by both men by May 1537, when Geoffrey Johns, yeoman of the Guard, was appointed keeper ‘in as full manner as Thomas Alford and John Catcote enjoyed the office’.⁸

In a petition to the king in the Court of Star Chamber in 1536, Catcot described himself as ‘John Catcotte of Batcombe in your county of Somerset yeoman of your Guard’.⁹ This plea to the crown sought a remedy for damage to hedges and dykes caused by a riotous group of twenty during the night of 24 February 1536, on the three acres of enclosed land in Batcombe which Catcot had held by copyhold for 12 years of the earl of Arundel, of his manor of Spargrove. Catcot complained that he was unable to get possession of the land to carry out repairs.¹⁰ The outcome of the case is not known.

Catcot was granted a corrody in the monastery of Athelney, Somerset, in 1533,¹¹ and was a collector for the subsidy in the hundred of Horethorne, Somerset, in 1538.¹²

The royal accounts for December 1545 show John Catcot as a yeoman of the Chamber receiving quarterly wages at the rate of 4d. a day.¹³ In January 1546 he was appointed bailiff and collector of the manors of East Brent, Meare, North Load, South Brent, Berrow,

---

² LC 2/1, f.131v.
³ E101/417/4, f. (unnumbered) 26r; BL Additional Ms. 18,826, f.20; LP I i, 735.
⁴ E101/417/6, f.54.
⁵ E101/418/5, f.27.
⁶ Somerset Medieval Wills 1501-30, pp.204-5.
⁷ LP III i, 933 (30).
⁸ LP XII i, 1330 (15).
⁹ G. Bradford, ed., Proceedings in the Court of the Star Chamber in the Reigns of Henry VII and Henry VIII,
¹⁰ Ibid., pp.186-7.
¹¹ LP VI, 418 (19).
¹² LP XIII ii, 1216, p.510.
Lympsham, Ham, Sevington Deneys, West Monkton and Brent Marsh, Somerset, which formerly belonged to Glastonbury abbey, with £10.18s. 4d. a year.¹

John Catcot's will has not yet been located, and his date of death is unknown.

Thomas Catlyn

In the records of the duchy of Lancaster, Thomas Catlyn was described as being of Hardgrave, Northamptonshire.² He was related to Robert Catlin of the Middle Temple, who stood surety for him in 1538 for a lease of Castle Donington horse-mill.³

Catlyn was a yeoman of the Guard when appointed bailiff of Leicester town on 1 December 1526, with effect from the previous Michaelmas.⁴ On at least two occasions he was involved in the examination of men accused of seditious statements. A surgeon named Robert Molton appeared before the mayor of Leicester, John Barton, and Catlyn as bailiff, on 27 March 1532, when he denied statements which he was alleged to have made against an innholder of the town named William Gibson.⁵ On 14 December 1533 Ralph Churlis, a baker of Monstull, Leicestershire, was accused of speaking seditious words to Catlyn, threatening that local bakers would bring white bread into the town for the Christmas season contrary to instruction, and that they would have 'staves in their baskets to defend them'.⁶

Nothing has been found about Catlyn's activities at court, beyond the fact that he was authorized to receive livery of cloth for watching clothing as a yeoman of the Chamber on 18 December 1514.⁷ He had died by January 1547, when the bailiwick of the town and lordship of Leicester was granted to one Thomas Danett.⁸

David Cecil

Amongst the early Tudor yeomen of the Guard, David Cecil holds a unique position, since he was the grandfather of William Cecil who was to become renowned as Lord Burghley, Elizabeth I's Lord High Treasurer. Even Lord Burghley himself knew little about his grandfather's origins, and as a result of his efforts to discover these, some fanciful genealogies were compiled for him. The most credible pedigree has been accepted as that deriving from the race of yeomen or small gentry which had been settled for several generations at Allt yr

---

1. LP XXI i, 302 (17) and 148 (80); SP 4/1, Item 80; LP XX ii, 1067.
2. DL 41/839, f.83v; Somerville, i, p.571.
3. DL 41/839, f.86; Somerville, i, p.571.
7. E101/418/5, f.27.
8. DL 42/22, f.22Av; LP XXI i, 770 (81).
Ynys, in the parish of Walterston, on the Welsh border of Herefordshire. Some early versions of the family name were Sitsilt, Sicelt, Seyceld, Seisel, Syssell, Cycill and Seycil, and Cecil himself used Cissell or Cyssell.

According to Vincent’s pedigree, David Cecil’s great grandfather was Thomas Sitsilt of ‘Allt yr Ynys’, who married Margaret, daughter and heir of Gilbert de Winston. Their elder son Philip and his wife Margaret, daughter of John Phelps or Phillip, became the parents of Richard Sitsilt or Seyceld, who was David Cecil’s father. Cecil was the third son of Richard Sitsilt or Seyceld and his wife Margaret, or Maud, daughter and heir of Philip Vychan or Vaughan of Tillington, Herefordshire. Richard Seyceld’s will of 1508 shows that he had lands in the lordships of Grossemont and Ewyas, which he bequeathed respectively to the wife (presumably the widow) of his elder son Philip, Maud or Matilda verch Howel, and to his son John ap Philip Seyceld. David ap Richard Seyceld, otherwise David Cecil, the testator’s younger son, was appointed overseer of the will.

It appears that Cecil was a servant and kinsman of David Phillip, who was an esquire (later knight) of the king’s body, vice-chamberlain to Arthur, Prince of Wales, and steward of the manor of Collyweston, near Stamford, which belonged to the king’s mother, Margaret, countess of Richmond. David Phillip, who was of Welsh origin, had served overseas with the earl of Richmond before he gained the throne as Henry VII, and received many grants in the years following the victory at Bosworth field. Cecil was closely associated with Phillip and was an executor of his will, proved towards the end of 1506, in which he was named as Davy Scisseld. The two men were related through Cecil’s paternal grandmother Margaret, daughter of John Phelps, and Cecil married a kinswoman of Phillip’s wife, his mother-in-law being the daughter of John Semarke, while David Phillip’s wife Anne was daughter and

2. Blore, p.76; Duncumb, p.302.
4. Bindoff, i, p.602; Blore, p.80.
5. Barron, p.22.
6. Ibid., p.23.
8. CPR Henry VII, ii, p.29.
10. CPR Henry VII, i, p.80.
11. CPR Henry VII, ii, pp. 514 and 515; Barron, pp.23 and 25.
12. Rowse, p.56; Bindoff, i, p.602.
heir of Thomas Semarke. On 12 November 1506 Cecil was granted a licence to found a chantry in the church of St. Mary, Stamford, for the 'good estate of the king while he lives and for his soul afterwards and for the soul of Elizabeth his late consort', as well as for the souls of David Phillip, Phillip's parents and 'Anne his wife (when she dies)', with licence for the chaplain to acquire in mortmain lands to the value of £9 a year.

Cecil lived in St. George's parish in Stamford, where he was admitted to the freedom of the town in 1494 and was on the common council in 1495. He served as alderman, which in fact was mayor, of Stamford in 1503-4, 1514-15, and 1524-25, and represented the borough in Parliament in 1504, 1510, 1512-14, 1515 and 1523.

David Cecil married firstly Alice, daughter and heir of John Dicons, owner of the Tabard Inn in Stamford, who had served as alderman (mayor) of Stamford in 1476, 1483 and 1493. By this marriage he had two sons, Richard and David. His second wife was Joan, daughter and heir of Thomas Roos of Dowsby, Lincolnshire, by whom he had a daughter, Joan.

The earliest reference to David Cecil's activities is on 8 December 1496, when he was on the commission to purvey grain in the county of Rutland for the army to be sent towards Scotland. In December 1503 he was a commissioner for sewers in parts of Lincolnshire, and in July 1505 served in a similar capacity for parts of Rutland and Lincolnshire. On 19 July 1506 he received a grant, in survivorship with Sir David Phillip, knight for the body, of the office of park keeper at King's Cliffe park, Northamptonshire, with the herbage and pannage in lieu of fees or wages. In a fresh patent of March 1517 the office was granted to Cecil and his son Richard in survivorship.

Following Sir David Phillip's death in 1506, Cecil, described as the king's servant, was granted his former office of bailiff of Whittlesey mere and keeper of the swans there and in the counties of Huntingdon, Cambridge, Lincolnshire and Northamptonshire, together with the keepership of the woods in Glatton and Holme, county Huntingdon, for 'seven years and

1. Blore, p.76.
2. CPR Henry VII, ii, p.515.
4. Ibid., p.22.
5. Ibid., p.25. Bindoff, i, p.602, gives 1504-5, 1515-16 and 1526-7; Blore, p.76, gives 1504, 1515 and 1526.
8. Ibid.
9. Ibid.
11. Ibid., p.358.
12. Ibid., p.410.
13. Ibid., p.467.
longer during pleasure', rendering £8 a year.\footnote{C82/308; CPR Henry VII, ii, p.498.} The offices of bailiff of Whittlesey mere and keeper of the swans were further granted to Cecil for 30 years in June 1511,\footnote{LP I, 1743; LP I i, 804 (38).} his son Richard being granted the reversion in February 1536.\footnote{LP X, 392 (38).}

As one of the yeomen of the Guard, ‘Davye Sessell’ received livery of four yards of black cloth for the funeral of Henry VII in May 1509.\footnote{LC 2/1, f.123r.} He was described as a yeoman of the Chamber when appointed bailiff of Preston, Uppingham and Essendine, in Rutland, and of Skellingthorpe, in Lincolnshire, on 12 July 1509.\footnote{LP I, 295; LP I i, 132 (49).} At some time Cecil was appointed bailiff of Tinwell, since a survey of 1534/5 shows that he was paid an annual fee of £1. 6s. 8d. for this office, from the revenues which the abbot and convent of Peterborough received from the town of Tinwell.\footnote{Blore, p.75, citing Bridges’ Northamptonshire, ii, 549; see also VCH Rutland, ii (1935), p.282.}

On 6 December 1513 Cecil was appointed to the office of one of the king’s sergeants at arms, with a fee of 12d. a day.\footnote{LP I, 4597; LP I ii, 2535 (13).} On 1 August 1517 he received a 21-years’ lease of lands in Essendine, Rutland, and a pasture called ‘Shenynghorp’ in Lincolnshire, lately belonging to Margaret, countess of Richmond, at an annual rent of £18, with 3s. 4d. increase.\footnote{LP II ii, 3551.} The reversion of this lease was granted to his son Richard, page of the Wardrobe of Robes, in September 1532, for a term of 60 years from its termination, which was at Michaelmas 1538, at an annual rent of £18. 3s. 4d.\footnote{LP V, 1370 (7).} David Cecil was granted the stewardship of the lordship of Collyweston on 18 August 1523.\footnote{Barron, p.25; LP III ii, 3289 (18).}

In a communication sent to Wolsey by the duke of Richmond’s council in 1525, a report was made on the activities of the duke, the natural son of Henry VIII, while visiting various places. It was reported that on the way to Collyweston the duke had himself killed a buck in Cliffe Park, where ‘Davy Sicile’ had made him good cheer.\footnote{LP IV i, 1540.}

Cecil served in the office of escheator for Northamptonshire and Rutland in 1514-15, and for Lincolnshire in 1529-30.\footnote{Bindoff, i, p.602; Barron, p.25; Blore, p.76.} He also sat on a number of commissions in addition to those mentioned earlier. In March 1524 he was a commissioner for sewers in Lincolnshire,\footnote{LP IV i, 213 (2).} in 1531... and 1532 he sat as a J.P. for Rutland; in January 1535 he was on the commission for tenths and spiritualities in Rutland, and in 1536 he served on the commission to survey monasteries in Rutland, which involved the Priory of Broke, a house of the Black Austin Canons.

Upon the death of Sir William Spencer in 1532, the king appointed Cecil to take over the office of sheriff of Northamptonshire. Cecil wrote to Cromwell about this on 28 June that year, asking for his help in obtaining a warrant or money, since the deceased sheriff had a warrant from the king for £100 to cover his costs, and Cecil had been informed that the king's pleasure was that he should suffer no loss by the office. On 4 November 1532, a further letter from Cecil to Cromwell urged him to 'move the king according to his promise' that Cecil would lose nothing by his office as sheriff, and added that he would be a great loser unless he had the same office next year. Edward Montague, sergeant at law, wrote to Cromwell on the same day, advising that Cecil should continue in office the following year. Sir Thomas Audley also wrote in support, saying that he would have submitted Cecil's name if the judges had allowed it, and suggested that he be appointed for Rutland instead. Apparently some objections to the choice of Cecil as sheriff arose on account of his uncertain temper, and a later litigant was to complain that even in his old age he was ready to draw and strike. Nevertheless, in the event, the king himself inserted Cecil's name on the list and signed a fiat appointing him sheriff of Northamptonshire.

While this matter was in abeyance, Cecil communicated with Cromwell on 14 October 1532, thanking him for his kindness and sending two cygnets. He also requested that the bearer of the letter, the son of a servant of his, might be taken into Cromwell's service.

A list of fees and annuities payable from lordships, honours, castles and lands in various shires, dated in March 1534, shows that Cecil was in receipt of a fee of £2 a year in respect of his stewardship of Nassington, Yarwell and Upton, Northamptonshire.

Towards the end of his life, Cecil referred to his long service to two kings, when he wrote to Cromwell on 8 April 1534, complaining that one Merynge had a suit against him regarding

1. LP V, 119 (55) and 1694 (ii).
2. LP VIII, 149 (51).
3. LP X, 1191 (3).
4. LP V, 1130, citing BL Vesp. F.XEI, 159b.
5. LP V, 1516.
6. Ibid., 1517.
7. Ibid., 1518.
10. LP V, 1598 (10), and 1598 (10) (ii).
11. LP V, 1424.
12. LP VII, 352, p.147, citing BL Cott. Appx. xxviii, 82.
an obligation at Nottingham which was fictitious. Although the sum involved was only 20 marks, his defence had cost him £20. He continued: 'I desire you somewhat to ponder my truth and poor honesty, for it was never disdained in the king's father's days, when I was some time put in trust, nor yet in this king's time till now'.

As David Cyssell of Stamford, he made his will on the feast of the Conversion of St. Paul (25 January) 1535, bequeathing to his wife Joan his lands in Stamford and Nassington, with remainder to his son Richard. As well as various household goods, items of silver and cattle, he left his wife and her heirs a 'mark of swans marked with laduls straight up and down the bill and the leg'. The silver items included a gilt piece 'with the wheat sheaf in the bottom, the which I gave her before our marriage'. This is of particular interest, since the wheatsheaf formed the main part of the arms adopted by Cecil's descendants.

His eldest son Richard received Cecil's title and interest in the chantry lands given thirty years earlier for supporting a priest to sing for the soul of Sir David Phillip in St. Mary's church, Stamford. Richard was also bequeathed his father's title and interest in the Tabard Inn at Stamford and 'in all other places which John Dycons left to be sung for by a priest in St. Mary's church'. His best gown and two feather beds were also left to Richard, together with the residue of his goods. To his son David, Cecil bequeathed two complete feather beds and one other, a black gown of cloth lined with damask, a doublet of satin with a jacket, and his green coat. His daughter Joan was to receive £20 upon marriage, with half the household stuff at Dowsby.

Cecil asked to be buried in the parish church of St. George, Stamford. The exact date of his death was for some time uncertain, but according to his grandson, William Cecil, Lord Burghley, it took place in 1536, when Cecil was over 80. His eldest son Richard, his executor, proved the will on 16 March 1541/2. Probate may have been delayed because of a dispute over land. Cecil's younger son David brought a suit in the Court of Requests against his brother Richard, claiming that their father had bought lands in Stamford which should have descended to him as customary heir. He also stated that, with his father, he had obtained a 60-years' lease of the manor of Tinwell in Rutland from the abbot of Peterborough, and that his

2. PRO PROB 11/29 (3 Spert); Barron, p.25; Biore, p.76.
3. Ibid.
4. Ibid.
5. Ibid.
6. Ibid.; Bindoff, i, p.602, citing HMC Hatfield v, 69. His name is included in a list of sergeants at arms in December 1536 - see LP XI, 1417 (23) and (25).
8. REQ 2/12/230; Barron, p.25.
brother had ‘craftily suppressed’ the lease and obtained another. He described himself as a poor man, undone by his brother’s deeds. The suit was endorsed as dismissed on 14 March 1542. In the document submitted by Cecil’s son David, it is stated that Cecil died ‘about the feast of the purification of our lady in the twenty-seventh year of your grace’s reign’. This dates Cecil’s death close to 2 February 1536.

The manor of Burghley was purchased by David Cecil in 1526-28, providing the base for the mansion to be built there by his grandson William, Lord Burghley, in the reign of Elizabeth I.

Edward Decka and Elis Decka

Edward Decka’s name is included in the lists of yeomen of the Chamber receiving livery of cloth for watching clothing dated 1 December 1508, 8 November 1509, 13 December 1510, 8 January 1512, and 18 December 1514. He received livery of black cloth as a yeoman of the Guard for the funeral of Henry VII in May 1509.

Decka was one of the many yeomen of the Guard who served overseas. In May 1520 he was given a loan of £4 which was to be repaid from his wages after his return from Calais and Guisnes. This is an indication that he was one of the Guard of 200 which went to France for the ceremonies connected with the signing of the treaty returning the city of Tournai to the French, known as the Field of Cloth of Gold.

The only grant of offices which has been found for Decka was in February 1523, when he was appointed forester of Sowerby and Sowerbyshire, and keeper of ‘le Mote Hall’ of Wakefield, Yorkshire, for which he was paid 1½d. a day and 6s. 8d. annually for a cloak as forester, and 2d. a day as keeper. The patent for these offices was surrendered by Decka in May 1531, when Sir George Lawson was appointed to succeed him.

On 6 July 1524 Decka took a 21-years’ lease of the herbage of Glyn park, in the lordship of Holt, marches of Wales, at the annual rent of 56s. and 10s. 8d. increase.

3. E101/416/7, unfoliated.
6. E101/417/6, f.54.
7. E101/418/5, f.27.
8. LC 2/1, f.123r.
9. E36/216, f.90r.
10. LP IV ii, 2862 (6).
11. LP V, 278 (24).
12. LP IV i, 546 (6).
It is not known where Decka's family originated, though it may have been in Wales. In August 1535 one Decka, described as a Welshman and servant of Mr. Bruerton, was slain in Ireland.1

Edward Decka may have been identical with, or related to, Elis Decka, the yeoman of the Guard who petitioned the king complaining about the actions taken against him by Sir John Shilston, under steward of the lordship of Bromefield in the marches of Wales, mentioned in chapter 6.

No will or date of death has been found for Edward Decka, and nothing more is known about Elis Decka.

Nicholas Downes

Nicholas Downes was a yeoman of the Chamber by 30 August 1490, when he was granted the keepership of the manor of Swillington, Yorkshire, together with the offices of bailiff of the town and lordship, and keeper of the park there, during the minority of the son and heir of George Hopton.2 His name appears on the lists of yeomen of the Chamber receiving livery of cloth for watching clothing dated 27 November 14963 and 9 December 1502,4 and livery of cloth for Elizabeth of York's funeral in 1503.5 By the date of the next available list, 1 December 1508,6 he had been appointed yeoman usher, and he received livery of black cloth as a yeoman of the Guard for Henry VII's funeral in May 1509.7

On 3 June 1509 Downes was promoted to the office of sergeant at arms,8 and in that capacity he attended the coronation of Henry VIII and Queen Katherine three weeks later, on 24 June.9 He was appointed bailiff of Nuneham Courtenay, Oxon., on 3 November 1509.10 In February 1511 he was one of the sergeants at arms in attendance at the interment of Prince Henry, son of Henry VIII.11

Nicholas Downes served as a captain in the middle ward of the army which went to France in 1513, and received 'conduct' money for his men to return to their homes from Dover.

1. LP IX, 98.
4. E101/415/7, f.152.
5. LC 2/1, f.61r.
7. LC 2/1, f.122v; LP I i, 120, p.13.
8. LP I, 135; LP I i, 94 (18).
9. LP I i, 82, p.42.
10. LP I, 621; LP I i, 257 (8).
11. LC 2/1, f.170v; LP I i, 707.
after the campaign. His name is included among the sergeants at arms shown in lists of royal household personnel dating from c.1523-6.

Hall’s account of the riots against aliens which spread through the city of London on the eve of May Day 1517 records that Downes, who was with Sir Thomas More at St. Martin’s, was one of those injured during the disturbances.

Downes died between 31 July 1529, when he made his will, and 3 August that year, when the will was proved in the Commissary Court of London. In his will Downes described himself as a sergeant at arms and asked to be buried at St. James Garlickhithe, with his first wife Elizabeth. He bequeathed his best gown to his brother Geoffrey, his second gown to his daughter’s children, and a black velvet jacket to his daughter’s husband. The residue of his estate was left to his wife Anne. His executor was John Lytle, possibly the yeoman of the Guard of that name.

Lawrence Eglisfeld

Lawrence Eglisfeld’s father, Robert Eglisfeld, was the only son of William Eglisfeld of Eglisfeld, co. Cumberland, by his wife, a daughter (unnamed in the pedigrees) of Sir Thomas Broughton. Robert Eglisfeld married Jane or Janne, daughter of William Bewlew (according to Harvey’s pedigree of 1552), or William Benson (according to Flower’s pedigree of 1563-4), of Cawdbeck. Besides Lawrence, Robert and Jane had a son called John. Lawrence and John, together with their sister Johane, are in fact omitted in the three printed pedigrees of this family, which were those prepared by Harvey in his Visitations of the North in 1552, pedigree of John Eglisfeld of Lekenfeld, by Flower in his Visitation of Yorkshire of 1563 and 1564, and by Flower and Glover in their Visitation of Yorkshire in 1575. The generation shown in these pedigrees as children of Robert and Jane should be shown as their grandchildren, since they are the children of Lawrence’s brother John. The confusion no doubt arose from the fact that

2. LP IV i, 1939 (8).
6. Ibid.
John’s two sons were named John and Lawrence. These are mentioned in Lawrence Eglisfeld’s will of 1531, together with Margaret, Sybill and Mary, as children of his brother John. John Eglisfeld was described in 1510 as being of Sutton upon Derwent, Yorkshire, and he may have been the Sewer of the Chamber of that name. It was presumably his son John, Lawrence’s nephew, who appears in the pedigrees as married to Anne, daughter of Sir Robert Constable of Flamborough, since Lawrence Eglisfeld mentions his sister-in-law Jane Eglisfeld in his will. No evidence has been found that Lawrence himself ever married.

Lawrence Eglisfeld appears in a list of yeomen of the Chamber in December 1508, and in the list for the following year. He also appears as a yeoman of the Guard receiving livery for Henry VII’s funeral in 1509. By the time of the next list available, a Chamber list for December 1510, he is shown as a yeoman usher, in which capacity he is described in grants of office dating from 1 February 1511. The first of these appointed him bailiff, during pleasure, of the honor of Folkingham, Caythorpe, Westborough, Stpton, and Doddington Welburn, Lincolnshire, which office was in the king’s hands by the death of William, Viscount Beaumont. On 5 July 1511 he was appointed, during pleasure, constable of the castle, and feodary of the honor of Folkingham, Lincs., and on 11 June 1513 he became bailiff of the lordship of Sheriff Hutton, and keeper and paler of the park.

Eglisfeld had been appointed clerk of the cheque to the Guard by 24 June 1513, when he was described as such in a warrant to John Dawnce authorizing payment to him of £2,000 for the Guard’s wages. From December 1513 the name of Lawrence Eglisfeld appears frequently in the accounts of the treasurer of the Chamber, receiving payments for wages of the yeomen of the Chamber, for the carriage of the Guard’s jackets, and for storing the latter, when the number involved had become too large to keep within the palaces. In October 1514 he signed a number of receipts for materials, scarlet, black velvet, green satin, white satin and white fustian, and 18 caps for certain yeomen of the Guard who were to accompany the duke of Suffolk on his embassy to Louis XII of France, in connection with the latter’s marriage with

1. PRO PROB 11/24 (8 Thower).
2. LP I i, 438 (4), m.4.
6. LC 2/1, f.123r.
7. E101/417/3, f.57. See also LP I i, 1015.
8. LP I, 1463; LP I i, 709 (1).
9. LP I, 1775; LP I i, 833 (15).
10. LP I, 4200; LP I i, 2055 (44).
12. E36/215, fos. 138v, 140r; E36/216, fos. 40v, 99r, 121r.
Princess Mary.\(^1\) The scarlet is specifically mentioned in one of the warrants as being for coats for certain yeomen of the Guard accompanying the duke of Suffolk.\(^2\) The sum of £4 was paid for a wagon carrying the rich coats of the Guard from Calais to Paris and back, at a rate of 4s. a day for 20 days.\(^3\) Eglisfeld’s office in the Guard is also mentioned in a description of the Garter ceremony which took place on 27 May 1519, when the Guard of 300 rode ‘in rich coats of scarlet set with spangles of silver and gilt’, followed by Lawrence Eglisfeld, ‘clerk of the cheque of the Guard’.\(^4\)

Several further grants were made to Eglisfeld. In March 1519 he received an annuity of £8.13s.4d. out of the farm of the herbage and pannage of Sheriff Hutton Park. It was stated that this grant was made because the patent of 11 June 1513 granting him the herbage and pannage was invalid, as a patent of 6 May 1500 had granted the same to Sir Thomas Darcy, knight of the body, at the same rent as previously paid by the then earl of Surrey or John Dawny.\(^5\) Eglisfeld also received leases of the site of the manors of Sutton and Elvington, Yorkshire, in April 1520, together with land in Elvington and the farm of the fishery of the river Derwent for 21 years, at various annual rents;\(^6\) and in April 1521 the lease of a water-mill, a messuage and land in Birdale and some other land and three closes in the lordship of Sheriff Hutton, again for 21 years at various rents.\(^7\) He was granted the fee of the crown, 6d. a day, in January 1527.\(^8\)

In his will of 7 July 1531, proved on 1 October that year,\(^9\) Eglisfeld described himself as ‘yeoman usher of the King’s Chamber and clerk of the cheque of his most honourable guard’, and asked to be buried in Saint Stephen’s church in Walbrook, on the south side near his sister Johanne Herthill. He directed that there should be no pomp or pride at his burial. He made provision for a priest to be paid £7 a year for twenty-one years to sing for his soul, for the souls of his parents and friends, and for all Christian souls; and provided a sum of 8s. for an annual obit for his soul, his father’s and mother’s souls, and all Christian souls, when 12d. was to be spent on bread and ale for the priests and clerks, each priest was to receive 4d., the parish priest 10d. and every churchwarden 6d., and the residue was to be given in the church to poor

---

\(^1\) SP 1/230, fos. 289-92.
\(^2\) SP 1/230, f.299r.
\(^3\) SP 1/230, f.319r.
\(^4\) College of Arms Ms. N.50, f.39v; also printed in Anstis, App. p.xii.
\(^5\) LP III i, 154 (16).
\(^6\) Ibid., 779 (17).
\(^7\) Ibid., 1262 (26).
\(^8\) LP IV ii, 2839 (12).
\(^9\) PRO PROB 11/24 (8 Thower).
people. In addition, Eglisfeld left 8s. a year for the Corpus Christi mass ‘as long as the parish be content to keep it’.

As far as his chief bequests were concerned, Eglisfeld willed that the profits from the leases he had taken of the king’s surveyors for the lordships of Sutton and Elvington should be paid to his executors until his nephew John Eglisfeld married, within three months of which event the lease was to be delivered to his nephew together with stock to the value of £200. If John were to die before marriage or had no male heirs, the leases and stock were to go to John’s brother Lawrence Eglisfeld within three months of his marriage. The will also mentions purchased lands at Highgate, and in Laton in the bishopric of Durham, which similarly were left to his nephew John Eglisfeld or in default of male heirs to his nephew Lawrence Eglisfeld.
In default of male heirs of either, the land at Highgate was to go to the next heirs of the blood, and the land at Laton to the use of his three nieces, Sybil, Mary and Margaret Eglisfeld, dughters of his brother John, to each of whom he also left a legacy of £65.13s. 4d. for their marriage. His nephew Lawrence was to receive £200 at the age of 21.

Among other bequests were £50 each to Robert Miller, grocer, and his wife, £40 to Sir William Driver, parson of Elvington ‘for divers pains and labours that he have done for me’,
£10 to William Atkinson at Sutton ‘the which men say is my son’, a gelding and the sum of £3.
6s. 8d. to his servant Christopher Thomihead, paid by annual instalments of 13s. 4d., a bow and a young steer to John Davy and a bow to Richard Gilmn (who can both be identified as yeomen of the Guard) and a bow to every yeoman usher who was a daily waiter. Richard Foster, a fellow yeoman usher of the king’s Chamber, was the overseer of the will and was also left ‘the best gelding that he will choose of any that I have’ and 40s. in money. The executors were named as Sir William Driver, parson of Elvington, Robert Miller, grocer, and John Eglisfeld.

John and Bartholomew Flamank

John Flamank was the second son of Richard Flamank or Flamoke of Boscum, near Bodmin, Cornwall, by his wife Jane, daughter and heir of Thomas Luccombe of Bodmin. The family was settled in the neighbourhood of Bodmin, where it had been involved in local affairs since the thirteenth century. John Flamank’s father and grandfather had served as mayor of Bodmin, to which office John himself was elected for 1524-5 and 1534-5.1 Upon the execution of his elder brother Thomas for treason following the Cornish uprising of 1497,2 John Flamank

1. Bindoff, ii, p.146.
became his father's heir.\footnote{Bindoff, ii, p.146.} Another brother, Bartilmeux or Bartholomew, was also to be appointed a yeoman of the Guard.\footnote{E101/417/7, m.136; Wm. Page, ed., \textit{Letters of Denization and Acts of Naturalization for Aliens in England 1509-1603}, The Publications of The Huguenot Society of London, 8 (Lymington, 1893), p.137.}

It is not known when John Flamank was born but it must have been by 1480, since the earliest reference to him occurs as the writer of a letter sent to Henry VII c.1505-6 while in the service of the deputy of Calais, Sir Richard Nanfan, who became his father-in-law.\footnote{LP Richard III and Henry VII, i, p.232; Bindoff, ii, p.146.} This letter reports comments made by Hugh Conway, treasurer at Calais, to which post he was appointed in June 1504.\footnote{LP Richard III and Henry VII, i, p.232.} Conway had cast some doubt on the succession of the young Prince Henry to the throne in the event of Henry VII's early death, and had commented on the appointments made by the lord chamberlain, Giles, Lord Daubeney. 'Look how strong he is in the king's court of his household servants, for the greater part of the Guard are those that were the lord chamberlain's servants ...'.\footnote{LP Richard III and Henry VII, i, p.232.} This would appear to imply that Daubeney was strengthening his position in the royal household for a sinister purpose.

Flamank was dismissed from his post in 1511 by Sir Gilbert Talbot for misconduct which involved a 'fray' in the market in the time of Sir Richard Nanfan.\footnote{E101/417/7, m.136; LP Richard III and Henry VII, i, p.232; Bindoff, ii, p.146.} Since Nanfan died in 1507, this incident had taken place at least four years previously. Nevertheless, in September 1511, together with his brother Bartholomew, he was nominated for the next vacancy in the Guard. Both were described as 'late soldiers at Calais' and the treasurer of the Chamber was ordered to pay them wages of 6d. a day monthly pending their appointment to the Guard. The captain of the Guard was commanded to give them immediately their oath as servants to the king.\footnote{E101/417/7, m.136.} This favourable treatment may possibly have been influenced by Wolsey, who had been at one time chaplain to Sir Richard Nanfan and was an executor of his will.\footnote{Wedgwood, \textit{Biographies}, p.623.} Both John and Bartholomew Flamank appear on the list of yeomen of the Chamber dated 18 December 1514.\footnote{E101/418/5, f.27.}

By his wife Joyce, daughter of Sir Richard Nanfan, John Flamank had four sons, of whom the elder, Gilbert, married Joan, daughter and coheir of Reginald Gayer of Liskeard, Cornwall, by Alice, daughter of Edward Courtenay of Landrake, Cornwall. Gilbert Flamank had seven sons and two daughters.\footnote{Bindoff, ii, p.146.}
It is presumed that John Flamank was elected to represent Bodmin in the parliament of 1512, since he was described as the senior member for the town in the 1515 parliament, for which the king had requested that the previous members should again be chosen. He may possibly have been returned also in 1523, for which parliament the names of the members for Bodmin are lost. His son Gilbert represented the town in the 1529 parliament.

During the years 1516-18, following his father’s death c.1514, he was involved in disputes concerning his inheritance, including a disagreement with the prior of Bodmin over lands on Ruthen Moor. Both John and his brother Bartholomew were described as yeomen of the Guard in January 1517, when they testified that William Johnson, late of Calais, a shoemaker born in Gelderland, had been sworn English on 11 March 1458.

John Flamank saw service overseas again in 1520, when in May of that year he received wages of 12d. a day for three months in advance from the treasurer of the Chamber. At this time 200 of the yeomen of the Guard accompanied Henry VIII to the ceremony known as the Field of Cloth of Gold, while another contingent was sent to Ireland to serve the deputy there. It is presumed that Flamank accompanied the king, since those in Ireland were likely to have received wages from the under-treasurer there.

The military survey of 1522 shows that Flamank was assessed on goods of £20 in the parish of Bodmin, and could supply harness for two men, while at St. Minver, in the same hundred of Trigg, he was assessed at £2 on lands and tenements. He was a commissioner for the collection of the subsidy in the hundred of Trigg, Cornwall, covering the years 1524-1527. In 1525 he was assessed for the subsidy on land worth £20 in the parish of Bodmin.

John Flamank was a yeoman usher by c.1523-6, and was receiving the fee of the crown of 6d. a day by 1529. No other information about him occurs until 2 September 1538, when he was present at the interrogation of Thomas Lillick, master of the Clement of London which had been sent by its owner to Ireland for fishing, with twenty crew. Lillick had bought from a

1. Ibid.
2. Ibid., p.147.
3. Ibid., p.146.
4. Ibid., p.147.
5. LP II ii, 3362; Page, p.137.
7. LP III i, 704, 669, 669, 670; LP III ii, 2102 and Appendix 15; J. S. Brewer and W. Bullen, eds., Calendar of the Carew Manuscripts 1515-1574 (1867), pp.10 and 14.
9. Ibid., p.88.
11. Stoate, Cornwall Subsidies, p.92.
12. LP IV i, 1939 (8).
13. LP IV iii, 6072 (11) (third numbered 11).
Flemish man-of-war at the Isle of Wight a carrier laden with goods which he had taken 'by course of war'. The owner of the Clement, William Skarlott, had taken the goods into his ship and sold some of the merchandise at Penryn, where the matter was reported by a Breton. The outcome of the case is unknown.

On 18 March 1541 John Flamank was described as 'recently deceased'. His will has not yet been located.

Less information is available concerning Bartholomew Flamank. In January 1516, together with Walter Jagowe, another yeoman of the Guard, he was granted a licence to export 1,000 quarters of corn. He was granted jointly with another yeoman of the Chamber a messuage and land in Hele, by Lampford, near Lostwithiel, Cornwall, supposedly in February 1528, but this may have been incorrectly dated, since his will of 25 January 1527 was proved on 5 February that year. This shows him to be of East Greenwich, Kent, and St. Mary Matfelon, Middlesex. He was ill when he made the will, which indicates that his wife Jane and his children had already died, and that he wished to be buried in the parish church of St. Alphage, East Greenwich. Among several bequests were a bow, a sheaf of arrows, and a black hunting shaft to Lawrence Eglisfeld, clerk of the cheque to the Guard at that time; the base of his 'rich coat' and the sleeves of the same, together with his best halberd, to Henry Page (possibly another yeoman of the Guard); and three gold rings, one in the shape of a hart (or perhaps a heart) to mistress Miller of Bucklersbury, and the other two to Elizabeth Bramston. He left his brother John his best riding coat and appointed him supervisor of the will, his executors being Philip Wild (no doubt the yeoman of the Guard of that name) and Hugh Bramston.

John Forde

John Forde was a former servant of Sir Giles Daubeney, and his introduction to court was presumably through the latter's influence. Forde was probably already a member of the Guard when he was granted the office of keeper of the park of Donyatt, Somerset, on 29 September 1485. A fresh patent for this office, dated 11 May 1486, showed wages of 4d. a day

1. LP XIII ii, 266 (iii).
2. Bindoff, ii, p.147.
3. LP II i, 1464.
4. LP IV ii, 3991 (8).
5. PRO PROB 11/22 (27 Porch).
7. Campbell, i, p.68.
from the issues of the lordship of Donyatt and granted him the herbage of the park, for which Forde was to pay 20s. yearly to the crown.1

On 25 October 1485 he was granted for life the fee of the crown of 6d. a day,2 for which, together with his office at Donyatt, he received a saving in the Act of Resumption.3 The payment of the crown fee seems to have caused some difficulty, as the king sent a directive to his treasurer and chamberlains of the Exchequer on 8 November 1486, referring to the grant made to Forde on 25 October the previous year and asking them to pay the annuity together with all arrears.4 Some years later, an undated document of c.1508 signed by the lord chamberlain, Sir Charles Somerset, ordered the lord treasurer, the earl of Surrey, in the king’s name, to pay the fee of the crown to John Forde, John Edwardes, Robert Walker and John Whittington.5

In 1489 Forde was one of the 71 yeoman of the king’s crown and Chamber to receive russet cloth from the Great Wardrobe.6 He was also listed as a yeomen of the Chamber entitled to receive livery of cloth for watching clothing in November 14967 and November 1509,8 and livery of black cloth for the funeral of Elizabeth of York in 1503.9 On the occasion of Henry VII’s funeral in May 1509 he received livery of black cloth as a yeoman of the Guard.10

Early in Henry VIII’s reign Forde sued for a pardon, when he was described as John Forde of Donyatt, Somerset, Richmond, Surrey, Greenwich, Kent, and London, yeoman or gentleman.11 He surrendered his patent of 25 October 1485 in respect of the fee of the crown on 23 April 1523, when the fee was granted to Edmund Wyke, another yeoman of the Guard.12 Probably he was the John Forde of Ilminster, Somerset, whose will of 31 March 1523 was proved in June that year.13 If so, he left a widow, Johanne.

5. BL Egerton Ms. 2603, f.3.
6. E101/413/1; Campbell, ii, pp.499-500.
9. LC 2/1, f.61v.
12. LP III ii, 2994 (25).
13. PRO PROB 11/21 (8 Bodfelde).
George Geffron

On 11 June 1507 George Geffron was appointed to the office of king's searcher in the ports of Exeter and Dartmouth, Devon, and in all adjacent ports and places. His patent allowed him to serve the office by deputy, and granted him a moiety of all forfeitures taken by him or his deputy, without making any payment to the king. It is not known when he became a member of the Guard; the surname is still legible on a list of yeomen of the Chamber dated 27 November 1496, but the first name is no longer visible, and it is more likely to have been that of John Geffron, who appears on several subsequent lists (see biography of John Geffron).

Early in Henry VIII's reign he sued for a pardon, when he was described as George Gefferon, Joffron or Jeffron of Ottery St. Mary, Devon, gentleman or searcher, late of London, merchant, executor of Walter Keber.

Geffron was paid wages of 8d. a day as a yeoman of the Guard in April 1514, for service covering 55 days from 10 November 1513 to 5 January 1514, plus board wages of 1s. 6d. a week, totalling £2 8s. 8d. The Household Book of Katharine, countess of Devon, shows that in 1523/4 George Geffron of Ottery sent to her a present of ginger and marmalade, for delivering which his servant was given a reward of 20d., or 1s. 8d.

At the 1524 subsidy Geffron was assessed on goods of £100 at Ottery St. Mary, Devon. Nevertheless, in 1525 he was allowed a reduction of £26 13s. 4d. on the assessed sum, this being the amount of a loan to one Brian Hartewyll which 'to the assessors' knowledge' he never recovered. The revised assessment was therefore on goods of £73, since only whole pounds were taken into account.

Geffron was the sole executor of his brother John's will, which was proved in November 1521. He himself survived until 1533, when his widow and executrix, Joan Geffron, completed his accounts as collector of customs and subsidies on exports in the ports of Exeter and Dartmouth.

2. Ibid.
5. E36/215, f.155v; BL Additional Ms. 21,481, f.154v.
7. T. L. Stoate, Devon Lay Subsidy Rolls 1524-7 (Bristol, 1979), p.27.
8. Ibid., p.28.
John Geffron

It is reasonably certain that John Geffron was a yeoman of the Chamber by 1496, the surname being still legible on a list of the yeomen receiving livery of cloth for watching clothing in November that year.1 His name appears on most of the subsequent lists located, still as a yeoman of the Chamber in December 15022 and in February 1503, on the occasion of Elizabeth of York’s funeral.3 He was a yeoman usher of the Chamber by 1 December 1508, the date of the next available list,4 and appears in that capacity in lists for November 1509,5 December 15106 and February 1511, the latter relating to the interment of the infant Prince Henry.7 He received livery of black cloth as a yeoman of the Guard for the funeral of Henry VII in May 1509.8

On 4 May 1513 Geffron was granted, in fee, tenements of the annual value of £10, at an annual rent of 4d., it being found by inquisition of 10 January that year that the tenements concerned had been purchased in fee by ‘Scotchmen’ and ‘strangers’, contrary to law.9 Geffron was promoted to the office of sergeant at arms for life on 13 May 1513, with a fee of 12d. a day,10 his fee of 6d. a day as a yeoman of the crown then being granted to Roger Becke, another yeoman of the Guard.11 In June 1513 Geffron was involved in ordnance for the king’s army, when he received a delivery of gunpowder from Sir Sampson Norton.12

The document showing fees and annuities paid to those in arms for the king’s service, calendared by the editors of Letters and Papers of the Reign of Henry VIII as dating from 1516, shows John Geffron as a sergeant at arms appointed by Henry VII,13 which appears to be in error. He is correctly shown as a yeoman of the crown in ‘A Declaration made to King Henry VIII by Sir John Cutte, Under Treasurer of the Exchequer, of all Fees, Wages and Annuities paid at the Exchequer 24 Henry VII’.14 His name appears as a sergeant at arms in undated lists of the king’s servants in wages.15

1. E101/414/8, f.53.
2. E101/415/7, f.152.
3. LC 2/1, f.61r.
4. E101/416/7, unfoliated.
7. LC 2/1, f.171r; LP I i, 707.
8. LC 2/1, f.123r.
9. LP I, 3998; LP I ii, 1948 (14).
10. LP I, 4066; LP I ii, 1948 (67).
11. LP I, 4045; LP I ii, 1948 (51).
13. LP II i, p.876.
14. BL Stowe Ms. 146, f.7r.
15. LP IV i, 1939 (8).
In his will dated 20 June 1517, John Geffron described himself as sergeant at arms with King Henry VIII, and 'with whole mind and memory'. He asked to be buried in the north aisle of the church of the monastary of Westminster 'with the licence of the Lord Abbot of the same place and his officers if it shall fortune me in Westminster to die'. The main beneficiary and sole executor of the will was his brother George Geffron, who was bequeathed 'all my lands and tenements in Canterbury, Kent, which lands given were by our sovereign lord king Henry VIII', as well as other possessions both moveable and unmoveable. The mace which he had as a sergeant at arms was also bequeathed to his brother George. If his brother were to die without lawful heirs, he willed that his lands in Canterbury should descend to his own son William and his lawful heirs, and in default of any such heirs, to 'our sovereign Lord the king'. Possibly his son was under age at the time the will was made. Probate was granted at Lambeth on 15 November 1521.

Andrew and John Greenhill

Andrew Greenhill was a yeoman of the Guard when appointed bailiff of the lordship of Redmarley, Worcestershire, and keeper of the park there, on 1 June 1508. His name is included on the lists of yeomen of the Chamber for December 1508, November 1509, and December 1510, and he received livery of black cloth as a yeoman of the Guard for Henry VII's funeral in May 1509.

On 4 March 1521 Greenhill was described as 'of Cheltenham, Gloucestershire' when granted the lease of a tenement called Beryhouse on the east part of Hasildeyn, and a water mill called Bery mill, in the lordship of Redmarley Dabitot, Worcestershire, late of the earl of Warwick, for 21 years, at a rent of 40s. He was dead by 1 October 1535, when the offices he had held in the lordship of Redmarley were granted to the queen's physician, Richard Bartlat. His will of 12 September 1535 was proved in the Consistory Court of the Bishop of Worcester. Greenhill did not describe himself in the will, stating that he was 'sick and diseased in body' but 'in whole mind and perfect remembrance'. He requested burial in Cheltenham church.

1. PRO PROB 11/20 (18 Maynwaryng).
2. CPR Henry VII, ii, p.572.
3. E101/416/7, unfoliated.
5. Ibid., f.57.
6. LC 2/1, f.123r.
7. LP III i, 1215 (4).
8. LP IX, 729 (2).
giving 8d. to the high altar and 3s. 4d. to each of the five principal lights. To his son John, Greenhill bequeathed £5 in money, two feather beds with bedding, his best horse and all his clothes except his coats. His daughter Anne was bequeathed a hundred marks in ready money, half his household goods in Redmarley except the plate, one piece of silver, and twelve cattle of three years of age. If his daughter should die before her marriage, these were to remain to his wife. Greenhill left his mother 40s. and a gown lined with fur, and the residue to his wife.

After his death his widow, Anne Greenhill, was in January 1536 granted the lease of Beryhouse and Bery mill, with fields and pastures adjacent, for 21 years at the annual rent of £4 and 12d. increase, on surrender of her husband’s lease.\(^1\) The following month, on 12 February 1536, Andrew Greenhill’s son John was granted the lease of a water mill in Redmarley Dabitot for 21 years at an annual rent of 30s. and 12d. increase.\(^2\)

John Greenhill was a yeoman of the Guard when he received the reversion of his father’s former grant, held then by Richard Bartlat, of the offices of bailiff and park-keeper of Redmarley lordship, on 1 March 1540.\(^3\)

Most of the available information on John Greenhill comes from his will, which was made on 20 October 1549 and proved nine days later.\(^4\)

In this will he described himself as yeoman of the king’s honourable Majesty’s Chamber. His mother Anne Greenhill, widow, was one of the twelve people to whom he bequeathed a ring of gold worth 13s. 4d. Other bequests included sums of money totalling over £26, a grey colt to Sir Anthony Kingston, a grey mare to John Piers, clerk of the cheque to the Guard at the time, and a Venice lute to Mr. Heywood of the King’s Bench. The residue of all his property was bequeathed to Thomas Medgate, a fellow yeoman of the Chamber, who was his sole executor. The only relatives named besides his mother were his sisters and their husbands.

Possibly Andrew and John Greenhill were related to the John Greenhill who died some time before 17 March 1513, when Nicholas Hyde, a sewer of the Chamber, was granted the corrody in the monastery of Gloucester formerly enjoyed by John Greenhill.\(^5\)

---

1. LP X, 226 (37).
5. LP I I, 1732 (35).
Thomas Greenway

The earliest reference found for Thomas Greenway is in a list of Chamber personnel of November 1496, where he is shown as a yeoman usher. He appears in the same capacity in a list of those receiving livery of cloth for the funeral of Elizabeth of York in 1503, and in the Chamber list of December 1508. For the funeral of Henry VII in May 1509 he received livery of cloth as a yeoman of the Guard.

Together with a fellow yeoman usher, Oliver Turner, Greenway was paid the sum of 16s. 8d. in June 1502 by the treasurer of the Chamber for '5 days riding about thieves', indicating that they were involved in taking into custody men accused, and possibly convicted, of theft.

Thomas Greenway had evidently fought at the Battle of Blackheath in 1497, since on 15 August that year he received a grant, during pleasure, of two tenements in the parish of St. Nicholas Fleshshambles in the city of London, forfeited by Ralph Newenham, yeoman of the crown, for his absence from the king’s last victorious field. On 27 May 1499 Greenway was granted, for life, four messuages and two shops in Church Alley in the parish of St. Nicholas at the Shambles, in Farringdon ward, on surrender of letters patent dated 29 November 1486 to Ralph Newenham, together with two pieces of land, in the parish of St. Sepulchre, West Smithfield, and the parish of St. Andrew, Holborn, also formerly held by Ralph Newenham. A fresh patent in respect of this property was granted to Greenway by Henry VIII on 16 February 1514.

In addition to these grants, Greenway was appointed to the office of bailiff of the lordships of Aston Clinton and Wendover, on 26 October 1503, receiving confirmation of the position in a patent from Henry VIII of 23 August 1509. On 3 November 1509 Greenway was appointed to the office of a sergeant at arms, with a fee of 12d. a day. Possibly he had been nominated for this position some months earlier, since he is shown as a sergeant at arms appointed by Henry VII in a list drawn up in about 1516.

1. E101/414/8, f.53.
2. LC 2/1, f.61r.
3. E101/416/7 (unfoliated).
4. LC 2/1, f.122v.
7. Ibid., p.169.
8. LP I, 4780; LP II i, 2684 (77); LP II i, 357.
10. LP I, 445; LP I i, 158 (59).
11. LP I, 622; LP I i, 257 (9).
12. LP II i, 2736, p.876.
Thomas Greenway was probably from Buckinghamshire. He resided in the county and served on the commission of the peace in November 1512, October 1514 and December 1536. His name appears on a list of JPs for June 1539, but in fact he died before 24 September 1538, when his will was proved. He was one of the commissioners appointed to collect the subsidy in Buckinghamshire in August 1523 and in 1524. It is likely that he was the Thomas Greenway at some time escheator for Bedfordshire and Buckinghamshire.

In May 1522 Greenway took a 21-years’ lease of the lordships of Singleborough and Amersham Woodrow, the demesne lands of Buckland, Buckinghamshire, with land in Buckland called 'Dycons', at a rent of £25.19s. 0½d. and 10s. increase. He surrendered his patent for this lease in June 1535 in order to obtain a fresh lease of similar term to include his son Richard (who was a gentleman usher), when the annual rent was shown as £26. 9s. 0½d., with 40d. increase. Formerly, these lands had been part of the earl of Warwick's lands.

Information regarding Thomas Greenway’s property and appointments is set out in the Muster Certificate Book for Buckinghamshire of 1522, a rare survival of this type of document. This shows that he resided at Moreton Farm in Dinton, since an assessment is shown for goods as well as land there. Ten other people at the same place were also assessed on goods, though the amount for Greenway far exceeds any of these. The assessments were made on owners, not tenants or lessees, and the assessments on land, offices, annuities, etc., were based on net income after taking into account deductions for rents, fees and services (see table below).

In the subsidy which followed, in 1523/5, Greenway was assessed at £20 on lands in Dinton. The rates used for assessment were 2s. in the pound on the yearly value of land, and on goods of the value of £20 or more, and 1s. on goods worth from £2 to £20. For those whose

1. LP I, 3522.
2. LP I, 5506, p.907.
3. LP XI, 1417 (5).
4. LP XIV i, 1192 (42).
5. PRO PROB 11/27 (20 Dyngeley).
6. LP III ii, 3282, p.1364.
7. LP IV i, 547, p.235; A. C. Chibnall and A. Vere Woodman, eds., Subsidy Roll for the County of Buckingham, Anno 1524, Buckinghamshire Record Society, 8 (1944), p.11.
9. LP XXX i, 2297 (18).
10. LP VIII, 962 (9).
13. Ibid., p.74.
14. Ibid., p.11.
15. Ibid., p.10.
16. Ibid., pp. (in order of places listed) 74, 72, 110, 84, 91, 99, 104, 127, 142, 152, 177, and 180.
17. Chibnall and Vere Woodman, p.4.
Moreton Farm in Dinton (where the Bishop of Winchester was lord)

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Lands</th>
<th>Fee</th>
<th>Goods</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>£82</td>
<td></td>
<td>£100</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Cuddington (where Thomas Greenway was steward)

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Lands</th>
<th>Fee</th>
<th>Goods</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>13s 4d</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Haddenham

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Lands</th>
<th>Fee</th>
<th>Goods</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>£1. 6. 8</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Princes Risborough

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Lands</th>
<th>Fee</th>
<th>Goods</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>£2.10.0</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Great Kimble

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Lands</th>
<th>Fee</th>
<th>Goods</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>£1. 6. 8</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The Forens of Wendover (manor)

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Lands</th>
<th>Fee</th>
<th>Goods</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>13. 4</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Monks Risborough

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Lands</th>
<th>Fee</th>
<th>Goods</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>£3. 6. 8</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Oving

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Lands</th>
<th>Fee</th>
<th>Goods</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>13. 4</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Long Crendon

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Lands</th>
<th>Fee</th>
<th>Goods</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>8</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Chearsley

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Lands</th>
<th>Fee</th>
<th>Goods</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>£1.18. 0</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Hogston

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Lands</th>
<th>Fee</th>
<th>Goods</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>13. 4</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Singleborough in Great Horwood

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Lands</th>
<th>Fee</th>
<th>Goods</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>£1. 0. 0</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

goods were valued at less than £2, or who received wages to an annual value of £1, the rate was 8d. in the pound. Although the Subsidy Act of April 1523 had fixed the date for the first instalment at February 1524, Wolsey was so pressed for money that he required those individuals worth £40 a year and above to pay their first instalment by November 1523. This was known as the ‘anticipation’. The Act provided that in cases where a person was assessed in two places, the larger of the two values should be accepted and the other excused; and that no person should be taxed on both lands and goods. As tax on goods usually produced more than tax on land, the majority of assessments in Buckinghamshire were on the former. In Thomas Greenway’s case, however, the tax was on land. He was among the 124 persons in the county who had been required to pay the ‘anticipation’, since he had lands or goods to the value of £40. Nevertheless, he was also one of the people who successfully appealed against the assessment in respect of his goods, which had been given as £100. A note in the margin of the manuscript, added after appeals had been presented at Aylesbury, quotes a figure of £35.

As already mentioned, Thomas Greenway had died by September 1538. He made his will on 1 April that year and asked to be buried in the chancel of Dinton church. He bequeathed £40 to his son Richard, 40s. to his daughter Winifred and 20 nobles to his daughter Bridget.

1. Ibid., p.xii.
2. Ibid., pp.xiii-xiv.
3. Ibid., p.94.
4. PRO PROB 11/27 (20 Dyngeley).
Other bequests were 20s. each to his servants Inglosby and Edward; 5s. each to two maid servants, and a lamb to his servant Elizabeth Esgo. The residue was left to his wife Elizabeth, who was named as executrix. The overseers of the will were Roger Lee and Francis Lee, and among the witnesses were his son Richard Greenway, Morgan Johns, vicar, and Thomas Inglosby. A brass at the west end of the south aisle in Dinton church shows him in armour, together with his wife Elizabeth, who died in 1539, and three daughters. His son and heir, Richard Greenway, who died in 1551, is also commemorated on a brass, together with his wife Joan, daughter of John Tilney of Leckhamstead. At Richard Greenway's death his son and heir, Anthony, was only four years old, and Sir Richard Blount, a gentleman of the Privy Chamber, was granted his custody and marriage.

John Gilmin

John Gilmin, yeoman of the Guard and of the Chamber, is not to be confused with his namesake who was yeoman of the king's buttery and had died by December 1514, when his offices in Leicestershire and Huntingdonshire were granted to Oliver Holland, yeoman usher of the Chamber with the queen consort. The yeoman of the Guard had a son also named John, who became an usher of the Chamber. This son may have been the John Gilman described as an usher at Queen Anne Boleyn's coronation feast in 1533, and usher of the hall in October 1534. From the 1540s a John Gilmin appears as sergeant of the king's woodyard, but it is not possible to be sure that this is the same person as the usher.

There are thus at least three people called John Gilmin who had some connection with the royal household in the first four decades of the sixteenth century. By looking at details of grants to these people, and noting dates of death, it is possible to identify the yeoman of the Guard under discussion, who died in 1528. It should be noted that the biographer of the

1. Ibid.
3. Stephenson, p.39; An Inventory of the Historical Monuments in Buckinghamshire, i, p.124; VCH Buckinghamshire, ii, p.280, where the name Bulney is shown instead of Tilney.
6. LP I, 542 and 5683; LP I i, 218 (2); LP I ii, 3582 (8).
7. LP IV i, 464 (27) (5th numbered 27), citing Pat. Roll 16 Henry VIII, pt. 2, m.32. See also A. W. Gillman, Searches into the History of the Gillman or Gilman Family (1895), p.34.
8. LP VI, 562, p.248.
9. LP VII, 1352 (6).
10. LP XVI, 1500, II, p.716; LP XVII, 258, II, p.693; LP XVIII i, 623 (20).
John Gilmin who was M.P. for Bramber, Sussex, in 1545 has assumed that these three (or four) people of the same name were one individual.¹

Unfortunately, it is not possible to state the name of John Gilmin's father or the place of the family's residence. A. W. Gillman, who researched the family name, came to the conclusion that it was doubtful whether the father or son mentioned above could be identified with the John Gilman 'Gentleman Harbenger' of Queen Mary's reign, whose will was proved in June 1558, and who appears in a pedigree of Henry Gilman taken at the 1574 Herald's Visitation of Kent.² This conclusion is correct since, as stated above, the elder John died in 1528, and the gentleman harbenger's father is shown as Richard, in which case it could not be the younger John either.

A fanciful pedigree extending back to antiquity is given in the Gillman book, which is criticised in The Genealogist by Walter Rye.³ Although earlier Gilmyns can be identified, notably in Surrey, Cambridgeshire and Huntingdonshire,⁴ no satisfactory conclusions can be drawn about the ancestry of this particular branch of the family.

Possibly there was a tradition of royal service in the family. A John Gilemyn was King's Marshal at Bristol in 1261⁵ and, coming closer to the period concerned, in 1473 Edward IV's mother Cecily, duchess of York, had granted for life the office of keeper of her park and chase of Southfrith to her servants Richard Gilmin, esquire, sergeant at arms, and John Gilmin, yeoman of her Chamber.⁶ While no information is available about the former, it is possible that the latter was the 'John Gilmin footman to our dearest wife the Queen' mentioned in the accounts of the treasurer of the Chamber in July 1497,⁷ since Henry VII's queen, Elizabeth of York, was granddaughter of Cecily, duchess of York. In addition, a Thomas Gilmin received livery as a yeoman of 'my lord prince's household', for the funeral of Elizabeth of York in 1503.⁸ The same name appears on a list of yeomen of the Chamber of December 1514,⁹ and as a yeoman of the Chamber receiving 4d. a day in 1545.¹⁰ Again, there may have been two or more people of this name in royal service. A Thomas Gilmin who was appointed escheator in Cambridgeshire and Huntingdonshire in November 1489¹¹ and was described as of St. Neots, ¹. Bindoff, ii, p.217.

⁶. CPR Edward IV and Henry VI, 1467-77, p.563.
⁷. E101/414/8, f.38.
⁸. LC 2/1, f.73v.
⁹. E101/418/5, f.27.
¹⁰. LP XX ii, 1035, f.27.
¹¹. Calendar of Fine Rolls, 178.
Hunts., alias of Eltisley, co. Cambridge, late escheator in co. Cambridge in July 1500, may have been the Thomas Gilmin of St. Neots who died in 1508, for whom Thomas Lynde, yeoman of the crown, was an executor. The overseer of the will was ‘Henry Walker of London’, and this is a name which also occurs as a yeoman of the crown. These may be either personal relationships or may point to a connection through service at court, although there is no evidence that the Thomas Gilmin concerned was in royal service other than as an escheator, and his description is merely as gentleman. His will mentions his father Thomas and names Robert Gilmin, father and son, without stating a relationship. It seems most likely, therefore, that the Thomas Gilmin who died in 1508 was related to the Thomas Gilmin who was a yeoman of the Chamber.

John Gilmin, yeoman of the Guard, was described as yeoman of the crown when appointed to the office of keeper of Bristol castle in February 1509. He received livery of black cloth as a yeoman of the Guard for the funeral of Henry VII in May 1509, and sued for a pardon as John Gilmyn or Gilmin of Bristol on the accession of Henry VIII. On 26 April 1515 a fresh patent granted the keepership of Bristol castle to John Gilmin and John Williams, yeomen of the Guard, in survivorship. This new patent also included the office of doorward of the castle, with 2d. a day, and 3d. a day plus 1d. a night for the wages of two watchmen. Upon the death of John Williams both these offices were granted to John Gilmin and his son John, usher of the Chamber, in survivorship, on 27 June 1524.

Meanwhile, on 17 October 1514, John Gilmin (the elder) was appointed marshal of the king’s minstrels, with wages of 4½d. a day and a fee of 10 marks a year. As this position is actually mentioned in the patent of June 1524, it is quite certain that this is the same man. In January 1520 an ‘inspeximus’ in favour of John Gilmin and seven others of a patent dated 24 April 1469 licensed the king’s minstrels to continue and augment the guild which they had founded in St. Paul’s, London. It appears that Gilmin had also held the appointment as

1. CPR Henry VII, ii, p.204.
2. LP I i, 438 (3), p.238, m.6.
3. PRO PROB 11/16 (2 Bennett).
4. LP I i, 438 (3), p.238, m.6.
5. PRO PROB 11/16 (2 Bennett).
6. C66/607, m.31 (formerly m.5); CPR Henry VII, ii, p.594.
7. LC 2/1, f.131v.
8. LP I i, 438 (2), p.223, m.14.
9. LP II i, 380.
10. Ibid.
11. LP IV i, 464 (27).
12. LP I, 5504; LP I ii, 3408 (17).
13. LP IV i, 464 (27).
14. LP III i, 604, citing Rymer XIII. 705.
marshal or sergeant of the king's minstrels in the previous reign, since a list of fees and annuities paid by the king, granted by Henry VII, includes him in this capacity.\(^1\) The same fee, £53. 6s. 8d. for John Gilmin and seven other minstrels, appears in a list 'servants of the king with their yearly wages'.\(^2\)

Gilmin's will of 20 May 1513 was proved at Bristol on 7 March 1528.\(^3\) He described himself as a yeoman of the crown and appointed his wife Elizabeth as his sole executrix, bequeathing her the rents from two properties for life, as well as the residue of all his goods. Two sons are mentioned in the will, John and Richard, and Gilmin left directions that all such goods as remained at the death of his wife were to go to 'her children and mine and to none other'. The John Gilmin, yeoman usher of the Hall, who was appointed bailiff of the hundred of Powder, Cornwall, in October 1534 was probably the son of the yeoman of the Guard,\(^4\) and it seems likely also that his son Richard Gilmin was the yeoman of the Guard of that name.

The person named John Gilmin who was sergeant of the king's woodyard may also have been the harbinger to Queen Mary, and it seems most likely that the latter was the M.P. who sat for Bramber, Sussex, in 1545. As mentioned earlier, the 'gentleman harbinger' appears in a Kent pedigree of 1574,\(^5\) which gives his father's name as Richard Gilman. He also heads a pedigree from Vincent's Hertfordshire, where he is shown as 'John Guilemyn alias Gylemin of Troyle in Anglesey in Wales, and then gentleman Harbinger to the Queen's Majesty. Anno primo Mariae'.\(^6\) This pedigree shows that he married three times, his second wife being Susan Hornebolt of Gaunt in Flanders, a lady in waiting to Anne of Cleves. The sergeant of the king's woodyard also had a wife named Susan in the early 1540s.\(^7\) This is insufficient evidence that the two were identical, of course, and more research would be needed to establish this fact.

Assessments for the lay subsidy in the royal household include the name of John Gilmin in 1523-4,\(^8\) 1534-5,\(^9\) 1540-1,\(^10\) 1542-4,\(^11\) 1545-6,\(^12\) and 1546-7.\(^13\) Of these, the first assessment, of

---

1. \(LP\) II i, 2736, p.874.
2. \(LP\) IV i, 1939 (9); \(LP\) III i, 999.
3. \(LP\) VII, 1352 (6).
4. Gillman, p.26, citing College of Arms manuscript H.2, 158.
5. Ibid., facing p.32, citing Vincent's Hertfordshire, f.122, in the College of Arms, and BL Harleian Ms. 1504, f.50v.
6. \(LP\) XVI, 1500, II, p.716; \(LP\) XVII, 1258, II, p.693; \(LP\) XIX i, 80 (26), and 1035 (15).
8. E179/69/27.
4d., is likely to have related to the son of the yeoman of the Guard, as it was listed under the Hall, and was for wages only. The rest of the assessments were made after the yeoman's death. The John Gilmin listed as a yeoman of the Chamber receiving 4d. a day in 1545 may also relate to Gilmin's son John, but this again would require further research.

Richard Gilmin

It seems very likely that Richard Gilmin was the younger son of John Gilmin, yeoman of the Guard, and perhaps was related to Richard Gilmin, sergeant at arms and servant of Edward IV's mother, Cecily, duchess of York. John Gilmin, described as yeoman of the Chamber to the duchess of York in 1473, was probably also from the same family. The surname occurs in the counties of Cambridge, Huntingdon and, more notably, in Surrey, particularly in Burstow, where a Richard and Thomas Gilmin were parties to a fine in 1445-6 as to land there, and a Thomas Gilmine had a quit-claim of land in 1469. A Henry Gilmin was of Burstow, Surrey, in 1497.

Richard Gilmin, yeoman of the Guard, was included in the 1539 muster for the hundred of Reigate, Surrey. He was married to Johanna, second daughter of John Cooper of Lingfield, Surrey, by his wife Elizabeth, daughter of John Skinner of Reigate, Surrey, and Havering atte Bower, Essex. Richard had three sons, John, James and Anthony, and two daughters, Johanna and Catherine. He was probably the Richard Gilmin who was paid 6s. 0d. by the treasurer of the Chamber in July 1529 for ‘riding sundry times for six days’, presumably upon the king's business. In 1531 he was bequeathed a bow by Lawrence Eglisfeld, clerk of the cheque to the Guard, whose will of 7 July was proved on 1 October that year. Richard Gilmin was one of the yeomen appointed to attend upon Queen Anne Boleyn at her coronation in June 1533.

There were at least three other people of the same name who should not be confused with the yeoman of the Guard. Both the father and brother of John Gilman, gentleman harbinger, were called Richard,¹ and a husbandman of Horsley, Gloucestershire, who died in 1538,² was another. It may have been the yeoman of the Guard who was granted the lease of a pasture in the lordship of Slimbridge, Gloucestershire, for 21 years in March 1523.³ Another Richard Gilmin, of Boston, was described as a singing man.⁴

The yeoman of the Guard was granted the fee of the crown of 6d. a day for life on 3 December 1537,⁵ 'in consideration of true and faithful service'.⁶ He was mentioned in a letter from John Husee to Lord Lisle in July 1536, 'I shall speak to Gilmin of the Guard to follow Wading's suit as you desire'.⁷ Following the dissolution of Merton priory, Richard Gilmin of the Guard was granted the lands of a farm called Landshott in Horley and Horne in February 1538.⁸ In the subsidy for the royal household in 1542-4 he was assessed 18s. 3d. on wages of £18. 5s. 0d.⁹

According to A. W. Gillman, Richard Gilmin retired to Reigate, the place of residence of his wife's family, and died there in the latter part of 1558.¹⁰ His will of 3 August 1558, which indicated that he was ill, was proved on 17 December that year.¹¹ He left legacies to his wife 'Julyan', (perhaps his second wife, as the pedigree shows his wife as Johanna, though this could be an error), and to his sons James and Anthony.

Anthony Hansard

Anthony Hansard was a yeoman usher of the Chamber by 1503, when he was in attendance at the funeral of Queen Elizabeth of York.¹² He received livery of black cloth as a yeoman of the Guard for the funeral of Henry VII in May 1509.¹³

On 24 August 1509 Hansard was described as yeoman usher of the Chamber when he was appointed 'during pleasure as heretofore' general receiver of the lands formerly belonging to Lord Welles and Lady Cecilia, deceased.¹⁴ The same patent granted him three more offices, as follow:-

2. Worcestershire Wills and Administrations, p.89.
3. LP III ii, 2923 (20); LP X, 597 (17).
4. LP XIV i, App. 23 and 24.
5. LP XII ii, 1311 (9).
7. LP XI, 94.
10. Ibid.
12. LC 2/1, f.61r.
13. Ibid., f.134r.
14. LP I, 449; LP I i, 158 (63).
bailiff of the lordships of Cumberworth and Trusthorpe; receiver of all lands in the hands of the late king by the minority of wards in Lincolnshire; keeper of the park and place of Hellowe, Lincolnshire.¹

It is likely that Hansard belonged to the well-known family of that name in Lincolnshire. The namesake who sued for a pardon early in the reign of Henry VIII was described as Anthony Hansard of Whittingham, Suffolk,² and it is probable that he was the son of Sir Thomas Hansard of Ludborough, Lincolnshire, and afterwards of Whittingham, Suffolk.³ This may be the man who is commemorated with his wife Katherine by a brass in the church of March, Cambridgeshire, dating from 1517.⁴ A household servant of Wolsey’s also named Anthony Hansard was sent to bring order to the earl of Oxford’s household, and he was assessed for tax of £6.13s. 4d. for the subsidy of 1523,⁵ but it has not been possible to identify him with the yeoman of the Guard.

On 4 April 1511 William Hansard of Kelsey and Anthony Hansard of Hallow, Lincolnshire, were named as sureties for the escheator of the county.⁶ Since the yeoman of the Guard was keeper of Hallow it is clear that he was the person concerned, and that William Hansard was probably a relative. It would have been difficult to identify him with Anthony Hansard of Intwode, Norfolk, alias of London, alias of Owersby, Lincolnshire, were it not for the fact that this description occurs in a document of 18 October 1514 granting him pardon and release as receiver of the possessions of Cicely, late viscountess Welles.⁷ The reference to Owersby may point to a relationship to the John Hansard of Beverley, Yorkshire, and Owersby, Lincolnshire, who was a pardoner early in Henry VIII’s reign.⁸

Hansard entered into an obligation, together with one Robert Southwell, for the ward of Simon Sampson, on 1 April 1511,⁹ and three years later, on 1 April 1514, he took an obligation to levy a fine on his lands in Lincolnshire and Cambridgeshire.¹⁰ In September 1514 he was still dealing with revenue from the lands of the late viscountess Welles,¹¹ and he was in debt to the king in November of that year,¹² and in November 1523,¹³ probably arising from this activity.

1. Ibid.
2. LP I i, 1803 (2), m.1.
5. I am grateful to the late Dr. Lawrence Gardiner for this information; see also LP III ii, 2932 (2, 3 and 5), and LP IV ii, 4587.
6. LP I, 1587; LP I i, 749 (6).
7. LP I, 5508; LP I ii, 3408 (21).
8. LP I i, 438 (3), m.8 and m.31.
10. Ibid., p.1486.
11. LP I ii, 3313 (6).
12. LP I, 5633; LP I ii, 3483.
13. LP III ii, 3694, p.1528.
It is assumed that he was the Anthony Hansard on the commission for collection of the subsidy in the Isle of Ely in November 1523, in the same month being pricked as sheriff for the counties of Cambridge and Huntingdon, in which office he served again in 1529/30. He was a commissioner of the peace for Cambridgeshire in February and May 1525.

Since the yeoman of the Guard was bailiff of Trusthorpe, he may have been the testator of August 1533 who bequeathed his best gown, doublet and jacket to his brother Robert Hansard, parson of Trusthorpe, together with £30 to pray for his soul. The will, proved in 1534, shows him to be of March, Cambridgeshire, like his namesake commemorated on the brass of 1517.

This Anthony Hansard left the residue of his lands and goods at the disposition of his wife Alice and 'Master Lewson', his executors, making no reference to any children. It seems likely that this was the widow named Alice Hansard who took a 68 years' lease from Ramsey abbey of the manor house and lands of Houghton cum Wyton, Huntingdonshire, in 1535. The manor of Russhebyes, in the parish of Abbots Ripton, Huntingdon, had been purchased by Anthony Hansard in 1529, but conveyed to one Oliver Leder at an unknown date, since the latter sold the property in 1535. In the absence of any firm evidence it can only be assumed that the yeoman of the Guard was the testator of 1533, whose will was proved in the following year.

Thomas Hawkins

Thomas Hawkins of Nash, Boughton under the Blean, Kent, came from a family settled in the county since Richard II's time. He was a yeoman of the Guard by 29 December 1536, when he was granted, in fee simple, two messuages and two gardens in the parish of St. Paul outside the walls of Canterbury. Hawkins obtained a licence to alienate this property to one John Twyne and his heirs on 26 April 1539. The fee of the crown of 6d. a day was granted to him on 9 December 1537, vice Anthony Saunders of the Guard, deceased. On 15 April 1538 he was awarded an annuity of £10 in survivorship with Robert Gibbes, also of the Guard, funded

1. Ibid., 3504, p.1458.
2. Ibid., 3583.
3. LP IV iii, 6072 (9) and 6598 (1).
4. LP IV i, 1136 (11) and 1377 (16) [indexed 13].
5. PRO PROB 11/25 (16 Hogen).
7. VCH Huntingdonshire, ii (1932), p.179; see also LP XII i, 1538, p.779.
8. VCH Huntingdonshire, ii, p.205.
10. LP XI, 1417 (28).
11. LP XIV i, 906 (9).
12. LP XII ii, 1311 (14).
by the payment due from the abbot and convent of Welbeck, Nottinghamshire, for the farm of the mills of Retford.¹

Hawkins received a lease for 21 years of Hernhill rectory, Kent, formerly the possession of Faversham abbey, on 13 July 1544, together with tithes of Denley marsh there and lands called le Beche in Hernhill, which belonged to Thomas, late earl of Essex.²

According to Hasted, Hawkins died in 1588 at the age of 101, and was buried with his wife in the north chancel of the church at Boughton under the Blean.³ On a tomb of Bethersden marble his figure in brass was depicted, with an inscription stating that he served King Henry VIII, which won him fame, and that he was 'high of stature, his body long and strong, excelling all that lived in his age'.

Baldwin Heath

The earliest reference found for Baldwin Heath appears in the accounts of Thomas Stokes, a teller of the Exchequer, covering September to November 1497, which show a payment of 4s. to Heath, listed with other personnel of the royal household, for expenses incurred during the Cornish uprising against taxation.⁴ Heath was almost certainly from Warwickshire, where he held land in Wootton in the hundred of Kingsbury⁵ and in Castle Bromwich.⁶ His name is included in the lists of yeomen of the Guard receiving livery of black cloth for the funeral of Henry VII in May 1509.⁷

Heath’s name appears in an account of receipts by John Heron, treasurer of the Chamber, as bailiff of Solihull in 1508,⁸ but the date of his appointment is not known. The only grant of office which has been found for Heath is dated 12 December 1519, when he was appointed surveyor of the king’s stallions and studs in the counties of Warwickshire and Worcestershire.⁹ This grant authorised him to appoint three servants, each to be paid 2d. a day, to attend the horses and break in their foals, and a smith to administer medicines, to be paid 40s. a year. Heath himself was to receive 4d. a day and certain pastures.¹⁰ By the same patent he was appointed keeper of the stables in the manor of Upton, Worcestershire, and of the lodge and

---

¹. LP XIII i, 887 (16).
³. Hasted, p.10.
⁴. E36/126, p.62.
⁶. CI 323, 30.
⁷. LC 2/1, f.131r.
⁹. LP III i, 581 (12).
¹⁰. Ibid.
colthouse in Budbrooke, Warwicks.; and granted 100s. for mowing and 23s. 4d. for forage, collars, shoeing, etc., for each of three stallions; and the same amount for every foal broken in.\(^1\)

Heath evidently enclosed 24 acres of his land in Wootton in 1498 or 1499, which was reported in the inquisition on enclosures carried out in 1517/18.\(^2\) At the time he was lord of the manor of Forde Hall in Aspley, which was then in the parish of Wootton Wawen.\(^3\) This property passed to his daughter Jane (or Joan, or Johanna),\(^4\) wife of John Fullwood, and afterwards descended to their son John and grandson of the same name, remaining in the family until at least 1653.\(^5\)

At a date between 1504 and 1515 Heath petitioned William Warham, archbishop of Canterbury and chancellor of England, for redress in a case of detention of deeds relating to property and land which he had purchased in Castle Bromwich.\(^6\) In the petition Heath described himself as 'yeoman of the crown to the king our sovereign lord'.\(^7\)

The date of Heath's death is unknown, but his will dated 4 April 1526 was proved that year in the Consistory Court of the bishop of Worcester.\(^8\) This shows that Heath was ill when the will was made. He requested burial in the church of St. Mary Magdalene of Toneworth, providing for various sums of money to several churches in the area. After bequeathing to Elizabeth Bentforth, his daughter, ten kine and heffers he left to his wife Agnes all his lands, farms and goods, and made her his sole executrix. The overseers included John Fullwood, his son-in-law.

The name of Thomas Hethe is included in the list of yeomen of the Guard receiving livery of black cloth for Henry VII's funeral in 1509,\(^9\) and he may possibly have been a relative, but nothing more is known about him.

\(^1\) \textit{Ibid.}
\(^2\) \textit{Leadam, Domesday of Inclosures, ii, pp. 451 and 461.}
\(^3\) \textit{VCH Warwickshire, iii (1945), p.214; Sir William Dugdale, The Antiquities of Warwickshire, second edition, ii (1730), p.817.}
\(^4\) Dugdale gives Joan; shown as Johanna and co-heir in \textit{The Visitation of the County of Warwick in the year 1619}, Harl. Soc., 12 (1877), p.237, citing Harl. Ms. 1167.
\(^5\) \textit{VCH Warwickshire, iii, p.214.}
\(^6\) Cl 323, 30.
\(^7\) \textit{Ibid.}
\(^8\) \textit{Worcester Wills and Administrations, p.82; Hereford and Worcester Record Office, Wills of 1493-1536, no. 80.}
\(^9\) LC 2/1, f.123r.
Edmond Huntwade

Edmond Huntwade received livery of 'watching clothing' as a yeoman of the Chamber in November 1496 and December 1502.2

He was appointed to the office of escheator for the counties of Northampton and Rutland on 6 November 1489,3 and was serving in this capacity in 1490.4 On 30 October 1498, he received pardon and release of all matters relating to the office of escheator in Northampton and Rutland.5 In February 1492 Huntwade was one of the commissioners for the same two counties charged with making provision for horses, labourers and carters for transporting the king's ordnance.6

Described as a yeoman of the crown, Edmond Huntwade was appointed keeper of the gaol in Northampton castle on 12 February 1493,7 a fresh patent of 24 January 1494 granted him the office of porter and keeper of the gaol, with fees from the revenues of the county of Northampton which had been usual in the times of Edward III and Richard II.8

Although already a yeoman of the crown by 1493, he did not receive the fee of the crown until November 1495, when he was granted 6d. a day for life from the previous Michaelmas on surrender of a patent by Nicholas Dounton.9 In October 1497 Huntwade was paid jointly with John Amyas the sum of 5s. 4d. for costs involved in riding to Dartmouth.10 This was probably in connection with the activities of the Cornish rebels earlier in the year, since the Exchequer accounts for September to November 1497 include a payment of 3s. 4d. to Huntwade for expenses incurred during the disturbances of the Cornish uprising.11 Huntwade is listed as a yeoman of the Guard receiving livery of cloth for the funeral of Henry VII in 1509.12

At the trial of Sir Richard Empson in Northampton castle in August 1509, Huntwade was a member of the petty jury which brought in a verdict of guilty and stated that Empson possessed lands and money in the county.13

1. E101/414/8, f.53.
2. E101/415/7, f.152.
3. Calendar of Fine Rolls, 325.
4. CPR Henry VII, i, pp.307 and 309.
5. CPR Henry VII, ii, p.170.
6. CPR Henry VII, i, p.394.
7. Ibid., p.427.
8. Ibid., p.468.
10. E101/414/16, f.2v.
12. LC 2/1, f.123r.
13. LP I ii, 2.
Nothing more is heard of Huntwade until 1514, when in January his name is included in a warrant for cloth of tawney medley for the daily waiters at the Tower of London. In February of the same year a gentleman usher of the queen’s Chamber, Roger Radcliff, was granted keeperships of certain areas in Rockingham forest which had been previously held by Edmond Huntwade. It is not known when Huntwade was appointed to these offices.

Edmond Huntwade appears in a list of ‘Fees and Annuities paid by the King’ as a yeoman of the crown by grant of Henry VII. On 23 July 1517, a Thomas Huntwade was appointed a yeoman of the crown with 6d. a day, on surrender of the patent of 26 November 1495 by Edmond Huntwade. Thomas was probably Edmond’s son. In March 1542 Thomas Huntwade, yeoman of the crown, and George Escott, yeoman of the Guard, were granted in survivorship the place of one of the 24 yeomen of the crown receiving 6d. a day for life, on surrender of the patent of 23 July 1517 to Thomas alone. As no further mention of Edmond Huntwade can be traced after 1517, it is probable that he died within the year, or soon after.

Edward Ingham

Edward Ingham is listed as a yeoman of the Chamber receiving livery of cloth for the funeral of Elizabeth of York in 1503 and appears in the Chamber lists of 1508, 1509, 1510, 1512, and 1514. He also received livery of cloth as a yeoman of the Guard for the funeral of Henry VII in 1509 and for the interment of the infant Prince Henry in 1511, and appears as a yeoman usher in various copies of lists of Chamber personnel. Early in 1513 he was paid 26s. 8d. for riding to Sandwich and Dover to ‘warn the wafters’ in connection with the hiring of ships. As a yeoman of the Guard he received wages at 12d. a day for three months in advance in May 1520, doubtless in preparation for the forthcoming celebrations taking place at the Field of Cloth of Gold.

1. BL Additional Ms. 18,826, f.45; LP I ii, 2606.
2. LP I, 3084 and 4762; LP I i, 1123 (46); LP I ii, 2684 (59).
3. BL Stowe Ms. 146, f.7r; LP I, 2736, p.876.
4. LP II ii, 3506.
5. LP XVII, 220 (71).
6. LC 2/1, f.61v.
10. E101/417/6, f.54.
11. E101/418/5, f.27.
12. LC 2/1, f.123r.
13. LP I i, 707, p.382 (indexed as William Ingham).
14. BL Harley Ms. 610, f.58; BL Harley Ms. 642, f.144r; BL Cotton Ms. Vespasian C.XIV, f.268r, and LS 13/278, f.154.
In July 1523 Ingham was appointed to an office in the duchy of Lancaster, becoming bailiff of the Savoy manor.\textsuperscript{1} This appointment went to John Lane, another yeoman usher of the Chamber, in February 1537.\textsuperscript{2} Ingham was granted, in reversion, the fee of the crown of 6d. a day held by William Standon, on 10 June 1528.\textsuperscript{3}

Together with his wife Cecily, Ingham took a lease from the abbot, prior and convent of Westminster of a building with a shop and tenements in King Street, Westminster, on 24 October 1528.\textsuperscript{4} The lease was for 35 years, at an annual rent of £4.16s. 8d. The rents for the individual parts of the property are shown in the sacrist's accounts for 1528:-

- For a tenement called the Rose: £2.13s. 4d.
- For another tenement annexed: 1.13s. 4d.
- For another tenement belonging to the Rose: 10s. 0d.

Totalling £4.16s. 8d.\textsuperscript{5} A detailed valuation of the property shows that the tenement called The Rose, in Ingham's own holding, was valued at £4, while the two other tenements, sub-let by Ingham, were given as £1.13s. 4d. and 13s. 4d. respectively.\textsuperscript{6} The valuation may have been compiled for the king, since in September 1531 he bought out the leaseholders of various properties in the area, in preparation for the extension of Whitehall palace.\textsuperscript{7}

Ingham made his will on 9 October 1534\textsuperscript{8} and died shortly afterwards. He described himself as Edward Ingham of the town of Westminster, and asked to be buried in St. Margaret's church, at the choir door. His wife Cecily and son-in-law Thomas Ewer were appointed executors. To Thomas Ewer he bequeathed all his goods and plate, and willed that after his wife's death all his goods should remain to his daughter Ellen and son-in-law. He further bequeathed to Ewer the wages due to him from the paymaster of the Guard for the five months May to September, as well as the wages of 3d. a day for three-quarters of a year due from the cofferer's clerk. Ingham's wife was bequeathed all her clothes and jewels, six spoons, a gilt salt with a cover, an ale cup and a silver goblet. All his goods unbequeathed were to be at the disposition of his wife and son-in-law.

\textsuperscript{1} Somerville, i, p.614.
\textsuperscript{2} Ibid.
\textsuperscript{3} LP IV ii, 4445 (10).
\textsuperscript{4} WAM 18041.
\textsuperscript{5} WAM 19810, m.3; G. Rosser, Medieval Westminster 1200-1540 (Oxford, 1989), p.347.
\textsuperscript{6} WAM 18048; Ibid.
\textsuperscript{7} Rosser, p.345.
\textsuperscript{8} WCA Will Register Bracy, f.46v.
It is likely that John Jackson, the yeoman of the Guard, was related to the sergeant at arms of that name appointed in October 1485.1 John Jackson, yeoman of the crown, was appointed keeper of the West park of Brancepeth, in the bishopric of Durham, on 16 July 1507.2 His name appears on the lists of yeomen of the Chamber in November 1509,3 1510,4 1512,5 and 1514.6 He received livery of black cloth as a yeoman of the Guard for Henry VII's funeral in May 1509,7 and as a yeoman for the interment of Prince Henry in February 1511.8

Jackson was described as a yeoman of the Guard when he was granted the fee of the crown of 6d. a day on 8 June 1513.9 Nevertheless, in the list 'Fees and Annuities paid by the king' he is shown as a yeoman of the crown by grant of Henry VII.10 His name is also included in the list 'Servants of the King with their yearly wages'.11

On 5 June 1510 John Jackson was appointed bailiff and woodward of the lordship of Linwood, with the hamlets of Theresby, Tevilby, Winterton, and Stewton, Lincolnshire.12 He received a grant of a 'mese stede' in the lordship of Doncaster, a close in the lordship of Rosington, and a toft in the lordship of Kanteley, Yorkshire, on 22 May 1511.13

It was presumably the sergeant at arms of the same name who was bailiff of the lordship and keeper of the manor of Sampford Peverell, Devon, and who was described as deceased by 22 November 1516, when James ap Jenkin, yeoman of the Guard, received the office.14

The date of Jackson's death is unknown, but probably took place early in 1526, since in April/May that year John Thomas, a yeoman of the Chamber, was granted the fee of the crown of 6d. a day vice John Jackson, deceased,15 and in June of the same year the bailiwick of the lordship of Stewton, Lincolnshire, was granted to W. Woodforth, yeoman usher of the Chamber.16

1. Campbell, i, p.82; CPR Henry VII, i, p.60.
2. CPR Henry VII, ii, p.528.
5. E101/417/6, f.54.
6. E101/418/5, f.27.
7. LC 2/1, f.131v.
8. LC 2/1, f.171v; LP I i, 707.
9. LP I, 4189; LP II i, 2055 (34).
10. LP II i, 2736, p.876.
11. LP IV i, 1939 (9), p.869.
12. LP I, 1071; LP II i, 519 (10); see also LP III i, 1117.
13. LP I, 1679; LP II i, 784 (35).
14. LP III i, 2594.
15. LP IV i, 2065 (28) (last so numbered).
16. LP IV i, 2291 (28) (fourth so numbered).
Nicholas Jackson

Nicholas Jackson is included in the list of yeomen of the Chamber for 1 December 1508, and is shown as a yeoman usher in the lists of 8 November 1509, 13 December 1510, and 8 January 1512. He received livery of black cloth as a yeoman of the Guard for Henry VII's funeral in May 1509, and as a yeoman usher for the interment of the infant Prince Henry, son of Henry VIII, in February 1511. Nicholas Jackson was granted the fee of the crown of 6d. a day on 17 June 1509, and on 22 May 1513 he was promoted to sergeant at arms for life, with the usual fee of 12d. a day. Upon promotion his fee of the crown was granted to William Standon, yeoman of the Chamber.

His name is included in the list of 'Fees and Annuities paid by the King' under the subheading 'To those in arms for the king's service, granted by Henry VIII', and also in the sergeants at arms shown in 'The King's servants in wages' and in 'Servants of the King, with their yearly wages'.

In July 1512 Nicholas Jackson was paid 10s. by the treasurer of the Chamber for 'going by water to Sandwich and Portsmouth, 5 days', and in November 1514 he was one of the three sergeants at arms who each received 100s. (or £5) 'for wages going to the West Riding, North Riding and Lincolnshire with the King's letters for the subsidy'. He was paid 40s. in January 1521 'for riding to Cambridge six days'.

Jackson received several grants of office. In July 1509 he was appointed controller of the great and petty custom in the port of Lynn, and on 23 August of the same year he was granted the office of bailiff of the lordship of Topsham, Devon. In April 1518 he was appointed weigher of wools, hides, tin and lead in the port of Newcastle upon Tyne.

1. E101/416/7, unfoliated.
2. E101/417/3, f.33.
4. E101/417/6, f.54.
5. LC 2/1, f.122v.
6. LC 2/1, f.171v; LP I i, 707.
7. LP I, 185; LP I i, 94 (62).
8. LP I, 4108; LP I ii, 1498 (78).
9. LP I, 4133; LP I ii, 1498 (97).
10. LP II i, 2736, p.876.
11. LP IV i, 1939 (8), p.867.
13. LP II ii, King's Book of Payments, p.1457.
14. LP II i, 3614, p.1516.
15. LP III ii, King's Book of Payments, p.1544.
16. LP I i, 132 (124).
17. LP I, 444; LP I i, 158 (58).
18. LP II ii, 4126.
On 30 June 1533 Jackson wrote to Cromwell from Harleston, regarding a grant which he was hoping to receive from the King:-

'You promised me the farm of Canne Hall, for which several persons are making labour with the King. Make what haste you can, and let the lease endure for 60 or 80 years. As I am the King's servant I should have it as well as another. Though it is called Canne Hall there are no houses on it, but two old barns and a little cottage. I trust the gentleman of Gray's Inn is a suitor to you for me. Whatever he promises I will perform.'

It is not possible to say whether this letter had a successful outcome.

He was probably the Nicholas Jackson who served on the commission of the peace for Leicestershire in 1531, 1532, 1538, and 1543.6

During the time of the northern rebellion in 1536 Jackson was evidently sent to Bawtry, since, by the testimony of one William Breyar, he met 'W.' Jackson, sergeant at arms, there.7

The following year, on 12 November 1537, he was one of the sergeants at arms in attendance with their maces at the funeral of Queen Jane Seymour.8

It is probable that he was the Nicholas Jackson who was a commissioner for the muster within the hundred of Framland, Leicestershire, in 1539.9 He may also have been the Nicholas Jackson who had the tenancy of a dwelling in the parish of St. Giles without Cripplegate, London, in September 1544.10

He was included in lists of sergeants at arms in October 1542, April 1544, November 154611 and in 1550.12

Jackson's death occurred at an unknown date before 17 July 1556, when his office in the port of Newcastle upon Tyne was granted to a gentleman usher of the Chamber.13

Thomas Jackson

Thomas Jackson's name is included in the lists of yeomen of the Chamber receiving livery of cloth for watching clothing dated 1 December 150814 and 8 November 1509.15 By 1510 he

---

1. LP VI, 727.
2. LP VI, 166 (10).
4. LP XIII i, 384 (80).
5. LP XIV i, 1056.
6. LP XX i, 622, p.319.
10. LP XIX ii, 340 (41).
11. LP XVII, 1012 (15); LP XIX i, 442 (22); LP XXI ii, 476 (69).
had been promoted to yeoman usher, being included in this category in the list of Chamber personnel for that year\(^1\) and in those for 1512\(^2\) and 1514.\(^3\) In May 1509 he received livery of black cloth as a yeoman of the Guard for the funeral of Henry VII,\(^4\) and in February 1511 was in attendance at the interment of the infant Prince Henry, son of Henry VIII.\(^5\) He was granted the fee of the crown of 6d. a day, \textit{vice} Robert Walker, deceased, on 5 November 1509.\(^6\) Nevertheless, his name is included in the list of yeomen of the crown receiving fees and annuities granted by Henry VII.\(^7\) He appears as a yeoman usher in an undated list of the royal household.\(^8\)

Jackson received two grants of office as bailiff, the first being in January 1511 for the lordships of Heckington, Aslackby and Bicker, with Riskington and Digby, Lincolnshire,\(^9\) and the second in February 1522 for the lordship of Navesby, Northamptonshire, which had been part of the duke of Buckingham's lands.\(^10\)

He had died by 10 August 1523, when a patent was prepared granting his fee of the crown to Robert Bardwell, another yeoman of the Guard.\(^11\) In his will dated 7 August 1523 he described himself as Thomas Jackson of Newington, Surrey, yeoman of the crown,\(^12\) and directed that he should be buried within the church of Newington. To his wife Agnes, his executrix, he bequeathed the wages due to him from the king and the residue of his estate. To his five children he left legacies of 40s. each, with an extra 40s. to his daughter 'Kateryn', and the benefits due to him from the lands in the forest of Knaresborough which he shared with his brother Nicholas, beseeching the latter 'to be loving to my said children therein towards their preferment as he would I should do for him if he were in case like'.

\textbf{Thomas Kyngman}

On 22 September 1485 Thomas Kyngman was undescribed when granted the office of bailiff of Wimborne Minster, during the king's pleasure, with the keepership, for life, of the warren of Badley and the custody of the manor of Kingston Lacy, Dorset, with all fees, wages

\begin{enumerate}
\item E101/417/3, f.57.
\item E101/417/6, f.54.
\item E101/418/5, f.27.
\item LC 2/1, f.122v.
\item LC 2/1, f.171r; LP I i, 707, citing LC Cl ix, 1, f.159, R.O.
\item LP I, 630; LP I i, 257 (17).
\item LP II i, 2736, p.876.
\item LP IV i, 1939 (9).
\item LP I, 1430; LP I i, 682 (13).
\item LP III ii, 2074 (20).
\item C66/642, m.15; LP III ii, 3289 (12).
\item PRO PROB11/21 (12 Bodfedefde).
\end{enumerate}
etc. pertaining to the offices.\textsuperscript{1} He was described as one of the yeomen of the king’s Guard when, for true and faithful service abroad and in England, he was appointed, on 2 October 1485, bailiff of the town of Somerton during pleasure and gaoler of the town of Ilchester, Somerset, for life.\textsuperscript{2}

He may have been the Thomas Kingman of Wyshforth, Wiltshire, whose will of 29 August 1536 was proved later that year,\textsuperscript{3} in which he mentions his sons John, Robert, William and Edward, and daughters Isabel and Marion. The residue was bequeathed to his wife Alice and son John, who were appointed executors.

William Maddockes

William Madok or Maddockes was one of the original members of Henry VII’s newly-founded bodyguard. In October 1485 he was described as a yeoman of the Guard when granted the office of keeper of the park and warren of Kenton, Middlesex;\textsuperscript{4} and in the same month he received the office of bailiff of the lordship of Solihull, Warwickshire.\textsuperscript{5} His name appears on the lists of yeomen of the Chamber of November 1496,\textsuperscript{6} December 1502,\textsuperscript{7} and February 1503.\textsuperscript{8}

On 21 September 1501, described as a yeoman of the Chamber, Maddockes was granted ‘certain lands with gardens’ in the parish of St. Giles without Cripplegate, London, forfeited by Humphrey Stafford.\textsuperscript{9} A further patent in May 1502 specified the messuages and gardens in Whitecross Street and Redcross Street, in the above-mentioned parish, not exceeding the value of 7 marks, which were to be held at a rent of one red rose annually at Midsummer, with an additional grant of the income from the properties since 21 January 1493.\textsuperscript{10} The grant of the premises was confirmed by Henry VIII in November 1509.\textsuperscript{11}

William Maddockes was appointed steward or rider of the forest of Morfe, Shropshire, on 12 August 1506, with 4d. a day from the revenues of the king’s mills at Pendilston, Salop, to be paid by the bailiff of Bridgenorth.\textsuperscript{12}

\textsuperscript{1} Campbell, i, p.553; Somerville, i, p.629.
\textsuperscript{2} CPR Henry VII, i, pp.10-11; Somerville, i, p.629.
\textsuperscript{3} PRO PROB 1 1  /27 (1 Dyngeley).
\textsuperscript{4} Campbell, i, p.98; C82/3, m.48.
\textsuperscript{5} Ibid., p.88; CPR Henry VII, i, p.27; C82/3, m.72.
\textsuperscript{6} E101/414/4, f.53.
\textsuperscript{7} E101/415/7, f.152.
\textsuperscript{8} LC 2/1, f.61v.
\textsuperscript{9} Ibid., p.271.
\textsuperscript{10} Ibid., p.271.
\textsuperscript{11} LP I, 671; LP I i, 257 (56).
\textsuperscript{12} CPR Henry VII, ii, p.468.
By October 1508 Maddockes had become one of the yeomen of the Chamber serving at the Tower of London, and it was in this capacity that he received livery of cloth for Henry VII's funeral in May 1509. His name is included on lists of yeomen at the Tower for January 1514 and July 1515.

The date of his death is not known, but his will of 3 October 1511 was proved in 1515. In his will he described himself as one of the yeomen of the Chamber, and directed that if he died in London he should be buried in the parish church within the Tower of London, or if his death took place in Putney Heath he should be buried in the parish church there. He made bequests to his brother Hugh Maddockes, his brother in law Roger Coken, Thomas Coken, son of the latter, and his son in law John Rabbe.

John Rolte

John Rolte received livery of cloth for watching clothing as a yeoman of the Chamber in November 1509, December 1510 and January 1512, and as a yeoman usher of the Chamber in December 1514. On 12 December 1511 he was awarded the fee of the crown lately held by William Rolte, who, as will be shown later, was his brother.

In 1513 John Rolte saw active service in the royal navy, as master of the Gabriel Royal, with 500 men. Together with Henry Skillman, another yeoman of the crown, he was appointed one of the keepers of the new park of Horn at Eltham on 20 March 1522.

The treasurer of the Chamber reimbursed Rolte, described as a yeoman of the Guard, the sum of £100 on 2 January 1529, authorized by a warrant dated at Bridewell on 20 November 1528, for money spent on repairs and buildings at Eltham. Further sums were paid to Rolte throughout 1529-31, when he was described as surveyor and paymaster of the buildings at Eltham. In July 1532 he was paid £12.0s. 6d. from the Privy Purse for repairs at Eltham, and in the following October he received £3. 6s. 8d. for the fee of the leash from the same source.

1. E101/416/7, unfoliated.
2. LC 2/1, f.128; LP I i, 20, p.14.
3. BL Additional Ms. 18,826, f.45; LP I ii, 2606.
4. E101/418/5, f.7.
5. PRO PROB 11/18 (12 Holder).
6. E101/417/3, fos.33 and 57; E101/417/6, f.54; E101/418/5, f.27.
7. LP I, 2030; LP I i, 1003 (18).
8. LP I, 3979.
9. LP III i, 3586 (24).
10. E101/420/11, f.18v; LP V, treasurer of Chamber’s accounts, p.308.
11. E101/420/11, fos. 22v 30r; 33r, 36v; LP V, pp.309, 310, 314, 316, 319, and 323.
12. LP V, pp.759-60.
Rolte had died by 24 February 1534, when his offices at Eltham were granted to an esquire of the Stable. In his will, proved on 31 May 1535 at Rochester, Rolte describes himself as yeoman of the king's Guard, and mentions his wife Elizabeth, sons John, Henry and Richard, and daughters Margaret, Helen and Lettice. His brother William Rolte, one of the overseers of the will, was to receive the profits of certain property in Eltham and lands in Bedfordshire and Huntingdonshire, for the use of the testator's son Richard, who was evidently under age. To his son Henry, Rolte bequeathed lands in Bromley, and to his son John lands in Eltham and in Pope Street, presumably in East Greenwich, where he had resided. He also directed that his 'woods at 22 years' growth' were to be sold for marriage portions for his daughters.

William Rolte

William Rolte was a yeoman of the Guard by 2 July 1509, when he was granted for life the crown fee of 6d. a day formerly held by William Kingston. His name appears on lists of yeomen of the Chamber receiving livery of cloth for watching clothing on 8 November 1509, 13 December 1510, and on 8 January 1512, where he is shown as a yeoman usher.

In September 1509 Rolte was appointed bailiff of Cullompton, Devon, and keeper of the park there, receiving confirmation of these offices by a new patent in April 1511. A few months later, in January 1510, Rolte was granted the office of bailiff of Topsham, Devon, during pleasure, with the rabbit warren, fishing rights and other benefits. These offices were confirmed by patent of 11 April 1511.

Rolte was a yeoman usher by February 1511, when he received livery of black cloth for the interment of the infant Prince Henry. On 16 November 1511, 'in consideration of the daily service done unto us', he was granted the next vacancy occurring in the office of sergeant at arms, being paid meanwhile the wages of 12d. a day from the first day of that month until appointed to the office, with a fee at the same rate for life. He was evidently admitted to the office the following month, since his crown fee was transferred on 12 December 1511 to John Rolte, his brother.

1. LP VII, 587 (16).
2. Drake, p.201.
3. LP I, 248; LP I i, 132 (8).
4. E101/417/3, f.33 and 57; E101/417/6, f.54.
5. LP I, 502; LP I i, 190 (18); LP I, 1600; LP I i, 749 (20).
6. LP I, 829, p.126; LP I i, 357 (35).
7. LP I 1601; LP I i, 749 (21).
8. LC 2/1, f.171r; LP I i, 707.
10. LP I, 2030.
On 18 September 1514 William Holden (possibly the yeoman of the Guard of that name) and his wife Katharine, of Great Chesterford, Essex, were granted licence to found a chantry for one secular chaplain in the church of All Saints, Great Chesterford, to pray for the good estate of the king and queen, the said William and Katharine, and of William Rolte, sergeant at arms, with licence to the chaplain to acquire lands in Essex and Cambridge to the annual value of 10 marks.\footnote{LP I, 5425; LP I ii, 3324 (20).} This seems to indicate a family relationship, though the names do not appear in Rolte's will.

Rolte was sent to Suffolk and Norfolk in 1515, to bring divers priests to the king and council, for which he received expenses of £6.13s. 4d. in August.\footnote{LP II ii, p.1468, King's Book of Payments.} For attendance on 'certain business' in London for six days he received payment of 2s. a day in July 1519.\footnote{LP III ii, p.1537, King's Book of Payments.}

He enjoyed further grants of office, being appointed keeper of Caversham park, Oxford, with the herbage and pannage on 21 March 1517,\footnote{LP II ii, 3042.} and ranger of Waltham forest, Essex, with 6d. a day, on 4 July 1521.\footnote{LP IV iii, 6072 (21).} On 21 November 1529 Rolte was appointed sergeant of the king's staghounds, with a fee of 7½d. a day.\footnote{PPE Henry VIII, p.155.} He received a reward of 20s. from the Privy Purse on 16 August 1531 'for bringing a stag to the king'.\footnote{PRO PROB 11/28 (36 Alenger).}

Rolte's will of 19 September 1541 was proved by November of that year.\footnote{PRO PROB 11/28 (36 Alenger).} In this he described himself as William Rolte, sergeant at arms, of the parish of Chigwell, Essex. He asked to be buried next to his mother in the parish church of Chigwell and made several bequests to the church there, as well as 20s. each to the parish churches of Calsam, Lynton and Barking, Essex, and of Stolton in Bedfordshire. Other bequests included his house at Stolton to one Thomas Hurni and his heirs, and the residue of lands in Stolton to his brother's son Richard Rolte and his heirs. His brother's son John is mentioned in the will, also Henry Rolte. Since these are the names of the sons of John Rolte, the yeoman of the Guard who died in 1534, this was obviously his brother. To his sister, Agnes Whapull, Rolte bequeathed all his 'stuff' at Calsam, all his household goods at Chigwell hall and five of his best kine there, and £10 in money.

George Stonarde was to have his lease of Chigwell hall, in preference to any other man, paying for it 'as another man will'. Rolte also bequeathed a gilt cup to his godson, William Stonarde, and a silver cup to Katherine Stonarde. To Edward Parker, one of his

1. LP I, 5425; LP I ii, 3324 (20).
2. LP II ii, p.1468, King’s Book of Payments.
3. LP III ii, p.1537, King’s Book of Payments.
4. LP II ii, 3042.
5. LP III ii, 1451 (4).
6. LP IV iii, 6072 (21).
7. PPE Henry VIII, p.155.
8. PRO PROB 11/28 (36 Alenger).
servants, Rolte bequeathed the 'house that he dwelleth in during my lease that I have in the king’s place', his executors paying the rent for the term of the lease, and 20s. in money. Several other servants were bequeathed various sums of money. The residue was left to his executors, George Stonarde, John Brickett and William Pownsett.

John Sandford

John Sandford's name appears on lists of yeomen of the Chamber receiving livery of cloth for watching clothing dated 1 December 1508, 8 November 1509, 13 December 1510, and 8 January 1512. He received livery of black cloth as a yeoman of the Guard for the funeral of Henry VII in May 1509. As a yeoman of the crown, he received the grant of the crown fee of 6d. a day for life, surrendered by John Watts, on 5 November 1510.

Sandford is shown in the list of yeomen of the crown granted the crown fee by Henry VIII in a list of c.1523, and in lists dated August 1525, November 1529, and September 1533. It is possible that he was the John Samford shown as receiving a fee or annuity from the revenues of the lands of Margaret, countess of Richmond.

Several grants of office were made to Sandford, two being received on 18 February 1513, when, described as a yeoman of the Guard, he was appointed bailiff of the lordship of Hooton Pagnell, Yorkshire, for life, with 2d. a day, and keeper of Bellister park, Northumberland, with fees from the lordship of Plainmeller ['Blemeller'], Northumberland. On 9 September 1514 Sandford, by then a yeoman usher of the Chamber, received the further office of steward of the town of Marton, Westmorland, and on 20 July 1527, still a yeoman usher, he was appointed constable of the castle of Cragfergus, Ireland.

Early in August 1529 he was described as John Sandforth of Appleby, Westmorland, yeoman of the crown, when he received a pardon, jointly with one Thomas Lawe, for killing...
Henry Salkeld, a member of the family with which Sandford’s family had a long-standing feud. In the following month, on 15 September, together with Robert Gibson, a fellow yeoman of the Guard, he was appointed water-bailiff of the Isle of Man, the office being in the gift of the king by the minority of the earl of Derby.

Sandford was granted a corrody in the monastery of Athelney, Somerset, at an unknown date; a patent of April 1533 granting the corrody jointly to him and to John Catcot, yeoman of the Guard, stated that it was previously held by Sandford alone.

All that has been found regarding Sandford’s family is that he was married to Maud, formerly the wife of Richard Warkop, deceased. During William Warham’s term of office as chancellor of England, between 1504 and 1515, Sandford petitioned the chancellor for redress in a case involving a debt owing to his wife’s late husband for boarding Elizabeth, wife of Edmund Santforth (possibly his son) and Alice, wife of Richard Claxton.

Sandford had died by 8 April 1535, when Piers Motton was granted the crown fee.

Thomas Sounde

Thomas Sounde was probably a yeoman of the Guard before 15 October 1485, when he was described as ‘king’s servant’ in a patent granting him, during pleasure, the office of bailiff of Cheshunt and Waltham Cross, Hertfordshire, and Clavering, Essex. The patent also granted Sounde the office of parker of Cheshunt park for life, with fees and wages as previous parkers had received, together with houses and chambers in Cheshunt manor, with revenues from the garden and the moors, rent-free. He had a saving of all these offices in Henry VII’s Act of Resumption. On 28 July 1509, however, the offices of bailiff of Cheshunt and park keeper were granted to one William Bedell.

Thomas Sounde’s name appears on the lists of yeomen of the Chamber receiving livery of cloth for watching clothing dated 1 December 1508, 8 November 1509, 13 December 1510.
January 1512, and 18 December 1514. He received livery of black cloth as a yeoman of the Guard for the funeral of Henry VII in May 1509.

On 1 January 1511, described as one of the yeomen of the king's Guard, Sounde was appointed bailiff of Drakelowe and Rudheath, Cheshire, vice Henry Wright of the king's Guard, deceased. He was rewarded with an annuity of 5 marks for life, from the revenues of the lordship of Denbigh, on 11 June 1513, receiving a fresh patent for this on 18 July 1515.

By a patent of 1 October 1511 Sounde was appointed bailiff of the hundred of Nantwich for life. This patent was surrendered at some time, since he was re-appointed to the office on 1 July 1515, with pardon for all debts and arrears. He evidently also surrendered his original patent as bailiff of Drakelowe and Rudheath, as a patent of 8 April 1516 for this office was surrendered by him in January 1526.

In 1520 Sounde arrested a man on suspicion of felony, and took him to Chester gaol. A Star Chamber petition by Giles Huncote recounts how a monk in Combermere abbey, county Chester, was stabbed to death by a household servant of the abbot there, on 11 February 1520. The servant, John Jenyns, was protected by the prior at Combermere, who was anxious to keep the murder secret, because as he stated 'this abbey is already in an evil name for using of misrule'. He therefore asked those who knew about the murder to keep quiet about it, getting them to swear an oath to conceal the matter. Nevertheless, six months or so later the crime came to the knowledge of Thomas Sounde, who arrested Jenyns and had him imprisoned in Chester gaol. The outcome of the case is not stated, but it seems to indicate that Sounde was a local man.

The latest of information concerning Sounde is on 21 September 1527, when another royal servant was granted the annuity of five marks which Thomas Sounde, yeoman of the Guard, lately had'. Although it is not stated that the grant arose from Sounde's death, this was probably the case, and no more is heard of him.

Henry Southworth

According to John Weever, Henry Southworth was born at Halton Castle in the parish of Runcorn, Cheshire at an unspecified date. Possibly he was related to the Edmund Southworth who was rector of Halton from c.1476 to 1491. Although he is not mentioned in the pedigrees, which deal principally with the descents of the heirs, it is probable that he belonged to the armigerous family of Southworth of Samlesbury which had been settled in Lancashire for many generations, descending from Gilbert Southworth of Southworth and his son Sir Gilbert, both of whom acquired a number of small estates in Middleton and the hamlet of Houghton in the fourteenth century. Sir Gilbert's grandson, Sir John Southworth, was a retainer of the duke of Lancaster, serving in his retinue in France. In 1415 Sir John covenanted with the sheriff of Lancashire to lead 50 archers in the French campaign, and in the same year received £113.15s. Od. for a year's wages of 50 archers who had been serving the king about his person. A later descendant, another John, was knighted in 1504, on the occasion of Prince Henry's creation as Prince of Wales.

The name of Henry Southworth occurs in this family in connection with property transactions in Middleton and Culcheth in 1428-9 and 1452 respectively, but no relationship can be traced with the yeoman of the Guard. In the will of Robert Southworth of Middleton dated in August 1500 a son Henry is mentioned, and in 1509 Sir John Southworth made a grant of lands in the manor of Arbury to Henry Southworth of Middleton, for life. It is not

1. LP IV ii, 3471 (21).
5. VCH Lancashire, iv, p.168; VCH Lancashire, vi, pp.305-6; VCH Lancashire, viii, pp.36-37.
8. Ibid., citing Exch. KR Accts. bdle. 46, no. 35.
9. Ibid., p.305.
11. Ibid.
12. VCH Lancashire, iv, p.168, note 18, citing Towneley MS. HH no. 1527. possible to identify this man with the yeoman under discussion either, since he was almost certainly the Henry Southworth who was described as deceased in May 1521.¹

On 3 March 1498 Southworth was granted the office of bowmaker and surveyor of the bowmakers and keeper and purveyor of bows in the Tower of London and in Ireland and elsewhere, ‘with the usual profits out of the issues of the counties of Surrey and Sussex',² together with a dwelling place in the Tower and livery of the suit of a yeoman of the Chamber at Christmas at the Great Wardrobe.³ In March 1512 a fresh patent granted the office to Southworth and Henry Pikeman in survivorship, with 6d. a day,⁴ or £9. 2s. 6d. annually,⁵ a further patent in similar terms being granted in April 1516.⁶

Southworth may have been a yeoman of the Chamber by 1496, some of the names on the list for that year having become illegible.⁷ His name appears on all the other extant early Tudor lists of yeomen of the Chamber receiving livery of cloth for watching clothing, in December 1502,⁸ December 1508,⁹ November 1509,¹⁰ December 1510,¹¹ January 1512,¹² and December 1514.¹³ He also received livery of cloth for the funerals of Elizabeth of York in 1503¹⁴ and of Henry VII in 1509, being listed as a yeoman of the Guard on the latter occasion.¹⁵

The royal accounts for March 1514 show that Southworth's wages as a yeoman of the Chamber were 1s. 0d. a day.¹⁶ Little is known of his activities. By October 1533 he had become one of the yeomen of the Chamber ‘attending within our Tower of London’, receiving five yards of broad cloth ‘of the colour of London Russett’ for watching clothing.¹⁷ This was no doubt towards the end of his life, when he was less active, and many of the yeomen who served in the Tower can be identified as former yeomen of the Guard. The date of his death is unknown, but Weever gives the information that he was yeoman bowyer and surveyor in the Tower for 33 years, and that he was buried at St. Peter’s in the Tower.¹⁸

¹. VCH Lancashire, iv, p.167, note 9.
². CPR Henry VII, ii, p.132.
³. Ibid.
⁴. LP I, 3095; LP I i, 1123 (57).
⁵. LP IV i, 1939 (9), p.869; see also E36/127, p.93, partially printed in LP III ii, App. 3.
⁶. LP II i, 1828.
⁷. E101/414/8, f.53.
⁸. E101/415/7, f.152.
⁹. E101/416/7, unfoliated.
¹². E101/417/6, f.54.
¹³. E101/418/5, f.27.
¹⁴. LC 2/1, f.61v.
¹⁵. LC 2/1, f.122v.
¹⁶. E36/215, f.150r.
¹⁷. E101/417/3, f.100.
¹⁸. Weever, p.286.
William Standon

When William Standon sued for a pardon early in Henry VIII's reign he was described as William Standon of Mitcham, Surrey, gentleman, yeoman of the Household. His father may have been the John Standon of St. Stephen Colmanstrete, London; Woodford, Essex; Middleton, Kent; Mitcham, Surrey; and Chesthunt, Hertfordshire, who mentioned a son William in his will, proved in 1477.²

William Standon was a yeoman of the Chamber by 1496, his name being included in the earliest of the extant lists of the Tudor yeomen.³ In fact his name appears on all of the surviving lists examined: for December 1502,⁴ February 1503, receiving livery of black cloth for Elizabeth of York's funeral;⁵ December 1508, from which time he is shown as a yeoman usher;⁶ November 1509,⁷ December 1510,⁸ February 1511, for the interment of the infant prince Henry;⁹ January 1512,¹⁰ and December 1514.¹¹ He was also listed as a yeomen of the Guard authorized to receive livery of black cloth for the funeral of Henry VII in May 1509.¹²

Standon was described as a yeoman of the crown on 13 February 1504, when appointed alnager and collector for the counties of Surrey and Sussex, for 12 years from the previous Michaelmas, 29 September 1503.¹³ A payment of 33s. 0d. was made by the treasurer of the Chamber 'to William Standon upon his bill' on 31 January 1504,¹⁴ and in November 1506 he received from the same source a sum of 40s. 0d., or £2, for 'going about the king's business for his orchard at Oking'.¹⁵ On 28 May 1513 he was granted the fee of the crown of 6d. a day, formerly held by Nicholas Jackson,¹⁶ and his name appears on the list of yeomen of the crown receiving the fee by grant of Henry VIII, prepared c.1516,¹⁷ and on that of c.1523.¹⁸

1. LP I i, 438 (2), p.228, m.24.
2. PRO PROB 11/6 (30 Wattys).
4. E101/415/7, f.152.
5. LC 2/1, f.61v.
8. E101/417/3, f.57; LP I i, 640.
9. LC 2/1, f.171r; LP I i, 707, citing LC Cl ix, 1, f.159, R.O.
10. E101/417/6, f.54; LP I i, 1015.
11. E101/418/5, f.27.
12. LC 2/1, f.122v.
14. BL Additional Ms. 59,899, f.45v.
15. E56/214, f.54r.
16. LP I, 4133; LP I ii, 1948 (97).
17. LP II i, 2736, p.876.
18. LP IV i, 1939 (9), p.869.
He may have been the William Stondon of Woodford, Essex, whose will dated 6 February 1523 was proved in 1524.\(^1\) In this will the testator requested burial in the chancel of the parish church at Woodford, and mentioned his wife, without naming her. A son John and daughter Joan were named, however.

John Stanshaw

John Stanshaw was an early adherent of Henry Tudor, earl of Richmond, serving him overseas and at Bosworth field before he gained the throne as Henry VII. Soon after the beginning of the reign John Stanshaw was rewarded by grants of office. On 23 September 1485 he was appointed bailiff of Wellow, Somerset;\(^2\) and on 24 September, 'in consideration of true and faithful service done unto us, as well beyond the sea as on this side in our victorious journey', he received the offices of keeper of the manor of Crookham, Berkshire, and bailiff and keeper of both parks there.\(^3\) In the Act of Resumption following Henry VII's accession, Stanshaw received a saving in respect of the latter offices.\(^4\) He was also appointed a yeoman of the crown, with 6d. a day for life, dating from Michaelmas 1485.\(^5\) On 6 November 1489 John Stanshaw was granted the office of escheator for county Southampton and Wiltshire.\(^6\) In 1497 he served as M.P. for Reading.\(^7\)

In William Harvey's 1566 Visitation of Berkshire, John Stanshaw (shown as Stanshall) of Reading heads a pedigree showing that he married Johan Dawson of Yateley, Hampshire, and had three sons, John, the eldest, Robert and Nicholas.\(^8\) As John died without issue, the second son, Robert, became heir.\(^9\)

Robert Stanshaw, groom of the Chamber, received a grant in tail male in January 1514, at an annual rent of one red rose, of Kiddington farm in the lordship of Streatley, Berkshire, and a close, occupied at the time by John Stanshaw, his father.\(^10\) Then on 28 November 1515 John Stanshaw of Kiddington, Berkshire, described as usher of the Chamber, was granted release of all entries on the farm lands of Kiddington, of which he was occupier.\(^11\)

---

2. Campbell, i, p.44.
3. C82/2 (2), m.206; Campbell, i, pp.14 and 52.
5. Campbell, i, pp. 405 and 465.
9. Ibid.
10. LP I i, 2617 (29); Wedgwood, Biographies, p.802; VCH Berkshire, iii, p.511.
11. LP I, 4670; LP II i, 1207.
According to the account in J. C. Wedgwood's Biographies of the Members of the Commons House 1439-1509, John Stanshaw was a burgess of Reading in 1497 and 1510, but was called 'mortuus' on a similar list of 1514. Although it is there pointed out that he was still alive on 16 January 1514, as evidenced by the grant of that date to his son Robert, the grant of 28 November 1515 seems to have been overlooked. The same is true of John Stanshaw's will of 18 May 1516, which was proved on 18 July following. He named his wife Johanne as sole executrix and his son Robert as overseer of the will. The residue of his goods was bequeathed to his wife, reference being made to a deed of gift dated 6 February 1512.

It is likely that towards the end of his life John Stanshaw became infirm, which would explain the fact that he did not stand as a burgess of Reading in 1514. He surrendered his patent as bailiff of the manor of Crookham and keeper of the parks there in March 1513, when the offices were granted to Sir William Sandys, knight of the body.

In view of the fact that John Stanshaw bequeathed his goods to his wife, his sole executrix, it is of interest to note a scandal in which he was involved in February 1503. In a case brought before Henry VII's council by Geoffrey Ellis, vicar of Thatcham, Berkshire, John Stanshaw, a yeoman of the crown and keeper of the neighbouring Crookham Park, was accused of attacking the vicar in his church on Sunday, 5 February 1503. An unusually full account of the case can be constructed from the evidence recorded at the time, probably because of the status of the accused. The cause of the scene arose from the fact that Stanshaw had left his wife and had lived in adultery for some years with a woman called Joan Stanshaw. The bishop of Salisbury heard of this and ordered them to appear before him at his manor of Ramsbury. The vicar of Thatcham, Berkshire, read the citation at the morning service in the presence of Joan Stanshaw, who threatened that the priests would repent the matter before night came. That afternoon Stanshaw entered the church accompanied by 16 riotous persons, armed with weapons, while evensong was taking place. Stanshaw with his son (unnamed) and a servant went into the chancel while the rest of his followers remained in the nave. The vicar was alarmed by his threatening demeanour and asked 'what mean thee?' Stanshaw replied 'What, priest art [thou] not content that I am here?', threw off his cloak and took his sword and buckler from his servant. His other servants then came into the chancel and would apparently have murdered the vicar if the latter’s servants had not rescued him. In his defence, Stanshaw declared that he had gone to church peaceably for evensong and that after sitting in his seat in the chancel the vicar shut the chancel door and called a number of servants, intending to attack him, so that his own servants then pressed in to rescue him. It is clear from the evidence, however, that Stanshaw was the aggressor. He rarely attended evensong and had earlier in the day announced his intention of going to the church and making a ‘fray’.1 The outcome of the case is not stated and awaits further research.

3. Ibid.

An entry in the King’s Book of Payments for December 1518 shows that a John Stanciall was paid, as a yeoman of the Guard, a whole year’s wages at 4d. a day from Christmas of that year, amounting to £6. 1s. 8d.2 It is impossible to identify this person at present, unless it was John Stanshaw’s son John who died without issue but whose date of death is not yet known. If this is the case it would mean that he was disinherited by his father in favour of the second son, Robert.

John Stoner, with Robert and Edmund Stoner

John Stoner was descended from the ancient family of Stoner or Stonor which had resided at Stonor, Oxfordshire, since at least the early fourteenth century. He is shown in the pedigree of Stoner of North Stoke, Oxon,3 and in Stonor of Stonor4 as the second son of Thomas Stoner by his wife Sibilla, daughter and co-heir of Sir David Brecknock. His paternal grandfather, another Thomas Stoner, married Johan, or Jane, the natural daughter of John de la Pole, duke of Suffolk.5 John Stoner’s elder brother was Sir Walter Stoner of Stonor, Oxon., knight of the body,6 who was knighted by the earl of Surrey after the English victory at Flodden Field in 15137 and later became Lieutenant of the Tower of London.8

Sir Walter’s second daughter, Elizabeth, married Sir William Compton,9 a favoured courtier of Henry VIII. This fact helps to explain the statement made in a letter from John Russell and Thomas Heneage to Wolsey in July 1528 which described Sir Walter Stoner and his brother, ‘one of the yeomen of the Guard’, as the executors of Sir William Compton.10

1. Ibid., pp.cxliii-cxlv.
2. E36/216, f.27r.
5. Turner, p.143; Burke, p.441.
6. LP II i, 2735, p.872.
7. LP I ii, 2246 (4 ii).
8. Burke, p.441.
10. LP IV ii, 4562.
Although neither was named in the will as an executor, they may well have been acting on behalf of the executors, because of their relationship to Compton’s widow.

Little is known about John Stoner's activities while he was a yeoman of the Guard. In the royal accounts for October 1528 he is named as a keeper, but it has not proved possible to trace the details of this office or when he received it. Sir Walter Stoner, in a letter to Thomas Cromwell in June 1535, mentioned that he was sending by his brother John certain statements made by witnesses regarding words spoken against the king and queen. In September 1535 John Stoner was appointed to the office of a sergeant at arms, with a fee of 12d. a day.

John Stoner and his wife, who was in the queen’s service, were granted the farm of the priory of Goring, Oxford, in September 1536, and early in 1537 Stoner received the grant of a lease of Goring priory, with the rectory. He was married to Isabella, or Isabel, daughter of Clement Agard of Foston, Staffordshire, and had four children, Francis (later Sir Francis), Elizabeth, Henry and Margaret.

In November 1537 Stoner was one of the sergeants at arms attending the funeral of the queen, Jane Seymour. His wife was also in attendance, with the ladies following the third chariot.

In December 1538 Stoner received a grant, for 21 years, of the house and site of the suppressed priory of Goring, Oxon., with certain lands, and Goring weir with fishing rights, a windmill and the ferry over the Thames there, together with 12 acres of land at Gattington Hill and all tithes. He was also granted annually the cartload of firewood from the woods of the earl of Derby at Goring, which the late prioress formerly received. The clear annual value was stated to be £5. 8s. 4d., rent 11s.

John Stoner received several appointments on 20 February 1540: as bailiff of the lordships or manors of Cholsey, Blewbury and Hendred, Berkshire; keeper of the chief messuage of Cholsey; and keeper of the wood of Onolde in the manor of Cholsey and of all other woods in the lordships stated which were in the king’s hands by the attainder of Hugh Cooke, late abbot of Reading, Berkshire, with fees of 100s. and 20s. a year respectively.

1. LP V, p.303; E101/420/11.
2. LP VIII, 844.
3. LP IX, 504 (5).
4. LP XI, 253.
5. LP XIII i, 1520, p.580, f.42.
6. Turner, p.143; Burke, p.442.
7. LP XII ii, 1060, pp.373-4.
8. LP XIII ii, 1182 (18) (o).
9. LP XV, 282 (81).
At its meeting at Ampthill (Bedfordshire) on 29 September 1540 the Privy Council dealt with a commission to Stoner, sergeant at arms, to preserve hares and partridges about one of the king's manors (unnamed).1

On 16 February 1541 John Stoner and Isabella his wife were granted, in tail male, Stokemules manor, Oxon., part of the lands of Thomas Cromwell, late earl of Essex, attainted.2 Earlier, Stoner had evidently held a lease within the demesne lands of the manor of Holyfield Hall, Essex, which was in December 1540 granted to John Cary, a page of the Privy Chamber, when it was described as 'lately occupied by John Stoner'.3 These lands had also been part of the possessions of Thomas Cromwell.

Further appointments went to John Stoner in March 1543, when he became bailiff of the hundreds of Ongar and Harlow, Essex, and 'wardstaff' of the same, an office which included various financial benefits.4 These offices had been held by Robert Stoner, yeoman of the crown, by a patent of 14 May 1522.5 His relationship to John Stoner will be referred to later. In April 1543/1544 John Stoner was granted the manors of Chigwell and Westhatch, Essex, on surrender of a crown lease by William Rolt, a fellow sergeant at arms.6

Described as bailiff of Cholsey, Blewbury and Hendred, Berkshire, of Chipping Ongar and Harlow, Essex, and having the king's gift of lands in tail male in county Oxford, John Stoner was given an exemption from attending the king in the war in August 1544.7 His name appears on the roll of commissions of the peace for the county of Oxford in 1544/45.8

Upon the death of his brother, Sir Walter Stoner, in January 1551 without a male heir, John Stoner received the bequest of Didcot manor, which his son Sir Francis Stoner eventually inherited under the terms of Sir Walter's will.9 The date of John Stoner's death is unknown, but he was probably the testator of North Stoke, Oxford, whose will was proved in 1550. His widow Isabel was granted an annuity of £20 on 12 January 1554 'in consideration of her service to Henry VIII and Edward VI and to the queens consort of Henry VIII in the place of the mother of his daughters'.10 This wording certainly suggests that Isabel Stoner enjoyed a warm, close relationship with Queen Mary in her youth.

1. LP XVI, 87.
2. Ibid., 580 (73).
3. Ibid., 379 (33).
4. LP XVIII i, 346 (6).
5. CPR Edward VI 1547-48, pp.110-111.
6. LP III ii, 2297 (14).
7. LP XIX i, 1036, p.649, f.49; LP XIII i, 1520, p.586.
8. LP XIX ii, 166 (22).
9. LP XX i, 623, p.323.
10. VCH Berkshire, iii, p.473.
11. CPR Philip and Mary, i, 1553-1554 (1937), p.60.
Although not mentioned in either of the pedigrees quoted above, there is strong evidence that John Stoner had two other brothers besides Sir Walter Stoner. The name of Robert Stoner has already been mentioned as a yeoman of the crown. In addition, there was an Edmund Stoner, yeoman of the Chamber and of the Guard. The relationship might well have been impossible to identify, had it not been for the survival of some of Sir Walter Stoner’s letters to Cromwell.

In a letter which Sir Walter Stoner sent to Cromwell in 1532 he mentioned that the bearer was his brother Robert. It seems feasible to assume that this was the yeoman of the crown of that name, and that he was the Robert Stoner who was in May 1537 appointed bailiff of the lordships of Croome Simon and Bushley, Worcestershire, and steward of the lordships of Tredington, Pampton, Fiddington, Stoke Orchard, Kemerton and Northey, Gloucestershire. The fee of 14s. 0d. paid to Robert Stoner in February 1538, shown in the royal accounts, may relate to these offices.

Sir Walter Stoner wrote many letters to Cromwell, but one which he sent on 9 September 1535 throws light on a family drama. Sir Walter begged Cromwell to be ‘favourable’ to his brother Edmund, who had been attacked by one of Sir Walter’s servants and had struck him on the head in self defence, inflicting an injury which led to the servant’s death eleven days later. This request had the desired effect in due course, as Edmund Stoner, described as of Windsor, Berkshire, received a pardon in July 1536, after having been committed to the Marshalsea prison.

Again, there seems to be good reason to suppose that the Edmund Stoner, yeoman of the Guard and of the Chamber, is the same person. In March 1529, as a yeoman of the king’s Chamber, he was paid his costs of 12d. for going from Greenwich to London ‘by master vice-chamberlain’s commandment’, and in 1533 he was one of the yeomen appointed to attend Queen Anne Boleyn at her coronation. In October 1536 Edmund Stoner, yeoman of the Guard, was granted the lease of the herbage, conies, etc., of the park and moor of Watlington, Oxon., the farm of the markets, tolls of the fairs and stallage there for the term of 40 years from Michaelmas 1540 at a rent of 63s. 4d., on the expiry of the 21 years’ lease of the premises

1. LP V, 1758.
2. LP XII i, 1330 (32).
3. LP XIII ii, 1280, p.526; King’s Book of Payments, BL Arundel Ms. 97, f.3v.
4. LP IX, 317.
5. LP XI, 202 (25).
6. E101/420/11, f.29r.
7. LP VI, 562, p.246.
granted by patent of 24 November 1519 to Roger Whitton, deceased. Edmund Stoner also appears listed under the county of Oxford in a muster book showing what soldiers could be supplied by the gentlemen of England in 1544.

Henry Strete

According to one biographical source, Henry Strete or Streyte of London and Devon claimed gentle birth, but his family has not been identified. He may have been connected with the John Strete who was rewarded with 10 marks in September 1490, possibly the Devonshire man of that name who died in 1495. Henry Strete himself resided in Devon from about 1510, after living in London. When he sued for a pardon early in the reign of Henry VIII, he was described as late of London, gentleman, late yeoman usher and yeoman of the Guard.

Strete was granted the fee of the crown, 6d. a day for life, as a yeoman of the crown, on 2
August 1502, and appears in a list of yeomen of the Chamber of 9 December that year, as Henry Strett. He was one of the yeomen receiving livery for the funeral of Elizabeth of York in 1503, and appears as a yeoman usher in Chamber lists of 1508 and 1509. On the occasion of Henry VII's funeral in May 1509, Henry Strete is shown as Henry Sterret in the list of yeomen of the Guard receiving livery of black cloth.

On 28 June 1508 Strete received a grant for life of the office of keeper of the park and warren of Stokenham, Devon, and the fishery of the pond called 'le Leyr' belonging to the manor of Stokenham, with the free fishery and swans of the same; and the herbage, pannage, underwood and windfall wood in the park and warren at 4 marks a year, 'so that he find and maintain 100 bucks and does in the park, with licence to hunt and take them at his will'. In 1509 he received two further grants: on 10 June the office of bailiff of the lordship of Westgate, Exeter (or Exe Island), vice Edward, earl of Devon, deceased, and, for 21 years, the farm of the

1. LP XI, 943 (24).
2. LP XIX i, 273, p.153.
5. Bindoff, iii, p.398.
6. Ibid.
10. LC 2/1, f.61r.
13. LC 2/1, f.123r.
watermills, etc., belonging to the lordship;\textsuperscript{1} and on 3 November he was appointed bailiff of the hundred of Hayridge, Devon, in the king's hands by the death of Edward, earl of Devon.\textsuperscript{2} He received a fresh patent on 11 April 1511, extended to include the lease of all the water and fulling mills, the river, sewer, and fishery of the Exe, subject to the rent previously paid to the use of the earl of Devon.\textsuperscript{3} These offices resulted from the death of the eighth earl of Devon, whose son and heir was attainted, and the confirmation of the offices to Strete for life in 1511 came on the eve of the reversal of the attainder.\textsuperscript{4} On 7 November that year Henry Strete was granted the rent of 4 marks due from him to the crown by the patent of 28 June 1508, appointing him to the keepership of Stokenham park.\textsuperscript{5} He was appointed a sergeant at arms on 18 May 1513, when his fee of the crown was granted to Thomas ap Guilliams.\textsuperscript{6}

It is possible that Strete's position at court may have come through employment by the Courtenay family, which may also explain his election to Parliament, for Plymouth, in 1510, since the family patronized Plympton Priory, which owned most of the land in the port. He may possibly have been favoured, too, by a colleague in the royal household, John Stile, who had sat for Plymouth in the previous parliament, and who was on embassy to the Queen of Castile in 1509-10. It was following the dissolution of this parliament that Strete sued out a general pardon, and received money towards his expenses from his fellow-Member, John Bryan. Since some names are missing for the next three parliaments for Plymouth and Plympton, it is possible that Strete sat again.\textsuperscript{7} As a dependant of the Courtenays and coroner of the shire, he played an important part in local affairs during Henry VIII's reign. In 1527 he witnessed the sealing of the dowager countess of Devon's will. He accounted for the manor of Exe Island for the last time at Michaelmas 1535 but by October 1536 he had been replaced as bailiff by Thomas Spurway.\textsuperscript{8}

The only other grant which Strete appears to have received, on 17 May 1520, was the lease of the pasture in Exeter castle, parcel of the duchy of Cornwall, with appurtenances in Crokenwell and elsewhere in Devon, except the gaol near the castle, for 21 years, for which the rent was 33s. 4d. with 20d. increase.\textsuperscript{9}

Henry Strete's will has not yet been located.

\begin{enumerate}
  \item LP I, 157; LP I i, 94 (37).
  \item LP I, 623; LP I i, 257 (10).
  \item LP I, 1599; LP I i, 749 (19).
  \item Bindoff, iii, p.399.
  \item LP I, 1945; LP I i, 969 (20).
  \item LP I, 4088 and 4042; LP I ii, 1948 (72) and 1948 (48).
  \item Bindoff, iii, p.399.
  \item Ibid.
  \item LP III i, 854 (17).
\end{enumerate}
William Studdon

The name of William Studdon appears in the lists of yeomen of the Chamber receiving livery of cloth for 'watching clothing' in November 1496,1 December 1502,2 December 1508,3 December 1510,4 January 15125 and December 1514.6 He also received black cloth to attend the funerals of Queen Elizabeth of York in 1503,7 Henry VII in 1509, when he was listed as a yeoman of the Guard,8 and of the infant Prince Henry, son of Henry VIII, in February 1511.9

Together with a fellow yeoman of the Chamber, Thomas Hill, he was appointed on 14 November 1509 to wait upon Princess Mary.10

On 25 November 1511 Studdon received a patent for an annuity of £10, during pleasure, from the customs at Exmouth,11 which was converted by patent of 2 August 1513 to an annuity for life from the customs at Exeter and Dartmouth.12 He evidently received a fresh patent in 1515, when such grants were being safeguarded, since a further grant of an annuity for £10 was made jointly to him and to William Symondes, a sewer, in survivorship, on 13 February 1520, upon surrender by Studdon of a patent dated 20 August 1515.13

The frequency of Studdon's name on the Chamber lists indicates that he was often present at court. Apart from the annuity mentioned, however, there is no evidence that he received any grants or held any local offices. In his will, proved in 1532, he described himself as yeoman of the king's most honourable Guard, and directed that he should be buried in the church of the Holy Trinity at Hounslow, Middlesex,14 bequeathing 11d. to the high altar there and 20d. to every brother. No relations were mentioned in the will. The only other bequests were 12d. to every child of one Robert Green, the overseer of the will, who was to receive 10s. The residue was to be sold at the discretion of his executor, Robert Getyns, marshall of the king's Hall, who was also to receive 10s. He may possibly have been married to Agnes, fifth

1. E101/414/8, f.53.
2. E101/415/7, f.152.
5. E101/417/6, f.54.
6. E101/418/5, f.27.
7. LC 2/1, f.61r.
8. LC 2/1, f.122v.
9. LC 2/1, f.171r; LP I i, 707.
11. LP I, 1992; LP I i, 969 (66).
12. LP I, 4385; LP I ii, 2222 (4).
13. LP III i, 644 (19).
child and only daughter of Sir John Clerevaux of Croft, York, by Beatrix his wife, daughter of Sir John Mauliverer, since Agnes married one Studdon.¹

Roger Temple

The name of Roger Temple appears in the list of yeomen of the Guard receiving livery of black cloth for the funeral of Henry VII in May 1509.² He does not appear in the lists of yeomen of the Chamber, unless his name is one of those which has become indecipherable.

Roger Temple sued for a pardon at the beginning of Henry VIII’s reign, when he was described as being of Barton under Needwood, Staffordshire; Wingfield, Derbyshire; Shuffenhall, Shropshire; and Temple, Leicestershire.³ He was almost certainly the Roger Temple of Temple Hall who was married to Agnes, daughter of John Benson or Bensow.⁴ The Temple family had resided at Temple Hall, Sibdon, near Welsborough, Leicestershire, since the time of Henry III, and the descent shows that Roger’s parents were Richard, son of Robert Temple, and his wife Elizabeth, daughter of Richard Vincent. Temple himself had a son called Richard, also described as of Temple Hall, who married Joyce, daughter and one of the heirs of one Lovett of Welford, Northamptonshire, and there were further descendants.⁵

The offices which Roger Temple held were bailiff of the new liberty in Derbyshire in 1493, bailiff of the new liberty in Staffordshire from July 1505, and keeper of Rolleston park.⁶ It is likely that he was the Roger Temple of ‘Burton’ mentioned in a document to John Yong, Master of the Rolls, in February 1511, which cancelled a recognizance of £100 made in December 1505 by several people.⁷

He was probably the Roger Temple of Barton under Needwood whose will was proved at Lichfield in 1522⁸ [not yet examined].

John and Robert Thomas

On 7 October 1485 John Thomas, one of the yeomen of the Guard, was appointed steward of the lordship of Haye and Glynbough, with authority to make appointments to all offices under him, and constable of the castle of Haye, for life. He was also appointed receiver of the ¹ Burke, History of the Commoners, ii, p.140, under family of Chaytor, formerly Clervaux.

² LC 2/1, f.134r.
³ LP I i, 438 (2), m.32.
⁴ BL Additional Ms. 5524, f.161v.
⁵ Ibid.
⁶ Somerville, i, p.549.
⁷ LP I, 1480, LP I i, 709 (22).
⁸ W. P. W. Phillimore, ed., Lichfield Wills and Administrations 1516-1652: Also ‘Peculiars’ at Lichfield, lordship of Haye and Glynbough, during pleasure.\(^1\) In the Act of Resumption of 1485 he received an exemption in respect of these offices.\(^2\) On 12 December 1486, described as yeoman of the king’s Chamber, he became constable of the castle of Snodhill and receiver of the lordship of Snodhill, co. Hereford, holding the constable’s office on account of the minority of Edward, earl of Warwick, and the receivership during pleasure.\(^3\) He may have been the John Thomas described in July 1487 as yeoman of the Wardrobe of Beds with the Queen.\(^4\)

Thomas was a commissioner appointed to take possession of premises in Wales and act as steward there in February 1488, when with Richard Lussher he was authorized to receive the rents of the lands and let them to farm to the king’s profit.\(^5\) On 6 November 1488 he was appointed to the office of the escheatry in the county of Hereford and the adjacent march of Wales, during pleasure,\(^6\) serving again in the office in November 1490.\(^7\)

In June 1492 Thomas was appointed, during pleasure, receiver for Kidwelly. He was described as being of Kidwelly or Glamorgan, and as a yeoman of the Chamber, and had been receiver of Gower during a minority in 1481.\(^8\) Thomas was also receiver for Ogmore and was probably the John Thomas of Cowbridge, Glamorgan.\(^9\) On 1 June 1496 the sum of 10s. was paid to John Thomas ‘a servant of the king’s’.\(^10\) In an account of the charges on Margaret, late Countess of Richmond’s Lands dated 29 June 1509, the names of John and Robert Thomas appear, under the heading ‘Fees and annuities payable to the following persons’.\(^11\) This John Thomas was almost certainly the yeoman of the Guard, since a grant was made in February 1516 to John Thomas and Robert his son, to be bailiff, in survivorship, of Fremington, Devon, with 4d. a day, on surrender of the patent of 5 February 1510 granting the office to Roger Ratcliffe, servant of the queen, for services to Margaret, countess of Richmond.\(^12\)

Thomas appears in lists of Chamber personnel as a yeoman in 1508, 1509, and 1510.\(^13\) The latter list is assigned to 1515/1516 in the PRO but must be of an earlier date, since Thomas was already a yeoman usher by January 1512, the date of the next available Chamber list.\(^14\) He is

\(1\) Campbell, i, p.79.
\(2\) Rot. Parl., vi, p.347.
\(3\) Campbell, ii, p.75; CPR Henry VII, i, p.155.
\(4\) E101/412/20, f.15.
\(5\) CPR Henry VII, i, pp.216-7.
\(6\) Cal. of Fine Rolls Henry VII, 194.
\(7\) Ibid., 341.
\(8\) Somerville, i, p.642.
\(9\) DL 41/839, f.144v.
\(10\) E101/414/6, f.33r.
\(11\) LP I, 235.
\(12\) LP II i, 1543.
\(13\) E101/416/7; E101/417/3, fos.33 and 57.
\(14\) E101/417/6, f.54.
listed as a yeoman of the Guard receiving livery of cloth for Henry VII's funeral in May 1509, and as a yeoman of the Chamber for the interment of Prince Henry in February 1511. On 10 March that year he was granted the fee of the crown of 6d. a day, vice John Edwards, deceased. He was appointed a sergeant at arms with 12d. a day on 9 May 1513.

After becoming sergeant at arms, Thomas was appointed in May 1515 constable of Trematon castle, Cornwall, and controller of the avenaries of the duchy of Cornwall. He surrendered the patent in respect of the latter office, which was conferred upon John Amadas, yeoman of the Guard, on 22 July 1517, on which date John Thomas was appointed harbour master in the duchy of Cornwall. Previously, on 11 February 1516, Thomas had received a fresh patent as constable of Trematon castle. He was a commissioner for collection of the subsidy in Cornwall in 1523 and 1524, commissioner and assessor of the duchies of Cornwall and Devon in 1528, a commissioner for stannaries in 1532, and auditor on the commission for tithes in Cornwall in 1535. In 1526 he was elected as a constable of the Staple of wool, hides, fleeces and leads at Exeter, and in 1538 was one of the officials who accepted on behalf of the crown the movable effects of the suppressed house of Black Friars at Truro.

John Thomas was clearly an active and influential man. He sat as the junior Member for Truro in the parliament which commenced in November 1529, and possibly sat in subsequent parliamentary sessions for which details of Members are lost, but nothing is known of any part he may have taken in the proceedings. In 1531 he was ordered to keep watch on a servant of the marquess of Exeter, who was under suspicion for helping his master to recruit men to rise against the king when the latter was planning to marry Anne Boleyn. Two servants of the marquis were eventually arrested and taken to the Tower of London by Thomas.

Thomas had died by 22 September 1542, when Nicholas Randall received the offices of constable of Trematon castle and controller and harbour master of the duchy of Cornwall.
The John Thomas, yeoman of the Chamber, who was granted the fee of the crown in March 1526 was clearly a namesake, still holding the fee in 1529.\(^1\) This was doubtless the John Thomas referred to as one of the yeomen of the Guard late on the wages of 12d. who was paid 45s. for wages at 6d. a day in May 1530, for the three preceding months.\(^2\) No family connection has yet been traced between the two men.

The name of Robert Thomas appears on a list of December 1545 as one of the yeomen of the Chamber receiving 4d. a day, and this is presumably John's son who was included in the patent of 14 February 1516.\(^3\)

In February 1523 Robert Thomas, yeoman of the Guard, was appointed parker of East Wood in the lordship of Thornbury, Gloucestershire, forfeited by the duke of Buckingham, with 4d. a day.\(^4\)

Henry Thornton

Henry Thornton's name is included in a list of yeomen of the Chamber for 1503, when he received livery of cloth for the funeral of Henry VII's queen, Elizabeth of York.\(^5\) He is shown as a yeoman of the Guard in the list for Henry VII's funeral in 1509,\(^6\) but is not included in the other lists of yeomen of the Chamber examined, unless his is one of the names which have become indecipherable.

Although Henry Thornton's parents cannot be named, he probably came from Somerset, a county with which he had strong links. On 28 November 1505, described as yeoman of the crown, alias late keeper of the gaol of Ilchester, Somerset, Thornton received a pardon of all escapes of prisoners before 1 March of that year;\(^7\) and in October 1512 he received a pardon from Henry VIII, when he was described as Henry Thornton or Thomtone of Playstrete, Somerset, yeoman, pardoner or gentleman, Henry VII's keeper of Ilchester gaol.\(^8\) On 9 August 1509 he was appointed bailiff of the lordship of Curry Mallet, Somerset, and keeper of the park there.\(^9\) Four years later, on 10 May 1513, Thornton was among several members of the Guard who were promoted to the office of sergeant at arms, with a fee of 12d. a day.\(^10\) His name is

1. LP IV i, 2065 (28); LP IV iii, 6072 (11) (4th numbered 11).
2. E101/420/11, f.98r.
3. LP II i, 1543.
5. LC 2/1, f.61v.
6. LC 2/1, f.131v.
10. LP I, 4046; LP I ii, 1948 (52).
included as a sergeant at arms in the lists of c.1526 headed ‘The king’s servants in wages’ 1 and ‘Servants of the king with their yearly wages’.2

In 1516 Henry Thornton of Curry Mallet took a lease for 40 years of part of the estate attached to the preceptory of Buckland, in the manor of Halse, the property of the Order of St.
John of Jerusalem,3 at a rent of £103. 6s. 8d.4 This was renewed for the same period in 1521.5

The manor of Ashe, near Basingstoke, Hampshire, was granted to Thornton for 21 years in July 1524, at a rent of £21.6 This appears to be the one exception when he received a grant outside the county of Somerset.

In May 1521 Thornton was a juror at the indictment found at Bedminster, Somerset, against the duke of Buckingham,7 and in May 1522 he was on the commission to enquire into a complaint made by a mason against the prior of Taunton.8 He served on the commission of the peace for Somerset in February 15319 and December 1532 to January 1533.10

Henry Thornton was elected to Parliament as one of two Members for Bridgwater in 1529.11 He was a controller of Customs there at the time, and on 27 December 1530 he was granted licence to perform this office by deputy.12 Obviously, he was very active, becoming a fairly wealthy and influential man in the county, and in 1532 he enlisted Thomas Cromwell’s support in securing the election of the new abbot of Muchelney.13 A dispute had arisen over the election, as there was some strong opposition to the appointment of Thornton’s nominee, and Thornton’s letters to Cromwell, written mostly at Buckland, clearly indicate his fear that his status in the county was threatened.14 Although Thornton’s nominee was eventually successful, the new abbot had to pay a large sum of money for his position.15

Thornton did not live for long after this dispute was successfully concluded. His will of 1 April 1533 was proved by his son-in-law, Thomas Tymbury, on 22 April that year.16 It is probable that the will was made in London, where the fifth session of Parliament ended on

1. LP IV i, 1939 (8).
2. Ibid., 1939 (9).
5. VCH Somerset, v, p.77.
6. VCH Hampshire, iv (1911), p.199; LP IV i, 546 (11).
7. LP III i, 1284 (v).
8. LP III ii, 2274.
10. Ibid., 1694 (ii), p.706.
11. Bindoff, iii, pp.446-7; LP IV iii, 6043, p.2692.
12. Bindoff, iii, p.447; LP IV iii, 6803 (27).
14. Bindoff, iii, p.447; LP V, 295*, 300, 1088-9, 1167, 1225, 1229-30, 1614; *the same letter in LP VI, 651.
15. Bindoff, iii, p.447; VCH Somerset, ii, p.106.
16. PRO PROB 11/25 (2 Hogen).
7 April, and he may have been a victim of the epidemic which caused the death of at least six Members of Parliament.¹

As Thornton made no mention in his will of his wife or of the daughter who had married Thomas Tymbury, they were presumably already dead. He had married Margaret, one of the four daughters of Thomas Copplestone and his wife Anne, of West Newton, Somerset. Margaret had previously been the wife of William Hymerford,² and Thornton made various bequests to members of this family. The Hawley pedigree in Visitations of Somerset 1531 and 1573 shows a daughter of 'Thornton, sergeant at arms' married to Thomas Tymbury of Upton, Devon³ but does not give her name. However, Thornton bequeathed the farm at Buckland to Thomas Tymbury and his children John and Margaret,⁴ and another daughter, Johan, wife of John Tuthill, received the bequest of the farm of 'Beremershe'. Johan and her children, Henry and Cicill, were also bequeathed Henry Thornton's chain (no doubt a chain of office), valued at £120, and all his plate, the whole to be shared equally between them. Other bequests included 13s. 4d. to the prioress of Buckland for herself and 20s. to be divided among the convent; to Sister Alice Hymerford 13s. 4d. to pray for his soul, besides her part of the 20s.; £20 to Peter Hymerford when he came to lawful age, and 20 marks to his sister Elizabeth Hymerford when she married; to Elyn, maid of the King's Head, for 'dressing his meat' 4s. 4d.; to Elizabeth who looked after him 6s. 8d. and two shirts beside her wages. In addition to items of clothing, Henry Thornton also bequeathed a riding gelding, a gray colt, and a bay horse 'that did bear my mail'.

Oliver Turner

Oliver Turner was a yeoman usher of the Chamber by 1496, when his name appears on a list of Chamber personnel receiving livery of cloth for watching clothing.⁵ He is included on the similar list of 1502,⁶ and received livery of cloth for the funeral of Elizabeth of York in 1503.⁷

1. Bindoff, iii, p.447.
4. PRO PROB 11/25 (2 Hogen).
5. E101/414/4, f.53.
7. LC 2/1, f.61r.
His appointment to the office of 'gauger' in the ports of Southampton and Poole in December 1500, was confirmed by Henry VIII in July 1509. In June 1502, together with Thomas Greenway, he was paid 16s. 8d. for 'riding about thieves'.

In August 1506 Oliver Turner was granted the keepership of 'the place of the earl of Westmoreland' in London, during the minority of the earl of Westmoreland, the king's ward.

As early as 1503 Oliver Turner became one of the yeomen of the crown and Chamber serving at the Tower of London, and was evidently in direct charge of this corps, since he was paid the money for their quarterly wages. In addition, two payments were made to him in the summer of 1504 for expenses within the Tower, one of £20 and the other of £30. Other payments, in 1506, included £4. 9s. 8d. 'for certain things bought by the said Oliver for the king's grace', a reward of 20s., and 20s. for the burial of Sir Thomas Green.

His name is included in lists of yeomen at the Tower in October 1508, December 1509, and December 1511. In the list giving details of livery for the funeral of Henry VII in 1509, Oliver Turner's name occurs in an unspecified group placed immediately before the officers of the king's ordnance. This can be identified as the yeomen of the Chamber and crown serving at the Tower, especially as the name of Sir Richard Cholmondeley, deputy lieutenant of the Tower at the time, precedes that of Oliver Turner.

Turner was one of the many royal servants who sued for a pardon at the start of Henry VIII's reign, when he was described as 'gentleman, vintner of London, late of the Household of Henry VII'.

In 1512 his name appears, together with Miles Gerard and Thomas Compton, as being indebted to Henry VII in respect of a recognizance for William Clerk, late customer of Sandwich. He may have been the 'Mr. Oliver Turner' who was entertained with several other people at the monastery of the Holy Trinity, London, on 17 June 1514. In May 1516 he was on the commission of enquiry into the ordnance of the Tower of London and vessels within its

1. CPR Henry VII, ii, p.220.
2. LP I, 256; LP I i, 132 (16).
5. BL Additional Ms. 59,899, fos. 37v, 39v, 51r, and 69r.
6. BL Additional Ms. 59,899, fos.60r and 63r.
7. E36/214, fos.25v, 47v and 56r.
10. E101/417/6, f.56; LP I i, 978.
12. Ibid.
15. LP II i, 115, ii, p.40.
precincts. He is shown as a yeoman of the crown receiving an annuity by grant of Henry VII in a declaration made to Henry VIII by Sir John Cutte, under-treasurer of the Exchequer, of all fees, wages and annuities paid at the Exchequer in the last year of Henry VII's reign. This was in respect of his fee of 6d. a day as a yeoman of the crown, in which capacity he also appears in a list of officers of the Ordnance in April 1519.

Oliver Turner had died by 6 May 1520, when his fee of the crown was granted to John Southall. His will of 3 May 1520 was proved at Lambeth by his wife Eleanor on 21 May. In the will he described himself as 'porter of the Tower of London ... of good memory whole and steadfast of mind thanked be God ...', and asked to be buried in the church of the Crossed Friars in the city of London, to which he bequeathed £5. Other bequests included 3s. 4d. to the high altar of the parish church within the Tower for forgotten offerings, and 3s. 4d. to the high altar of the parish church of St. Olave next our Lady of Barking. The residue of his estate was left to his well beloved wife Eleanor. No other relatives were mentioned. The supervisor and overseer of the will was John Scrase, citizen and vintner of London, who received a legacy of 40s. The witnesses were named as William Lowry, prior of the Crossed Friars, John Pettowe, and Thomas Gillingham, among many others.

1. LP II i, 1908, ii.
2. LP II i, 2736, p.876.
3. E36/127, p.100; LP III ii, App. 3.
4. LP III i, 854 (8) and 967 (21).
5. PRO PROB 11/20 (2 Maynwaryng).
Bibliography

Primary Sources: Manuscript

College of Arms

CA Arundel XVII/2: Articles of February 1526 relating to the king’s Chamber, based on those of Henry VII’s time.
CA M8: Royal Household ordinances of Christmas 1521.
CA N50: Descriptions of ceremonies celebrating the feast of St. George.
CA N51: [Part] George Cavendish’s ‘Life of Wolsey’.

Guildhall Library

Ms. 9171/10: Register of wills.

The Royal Society

Ms. 61: Copy of the Royal Household ordinances of Christmas 1521.

Westminster Abbey Muniments

WAM 18041: Lease from the abbot, prior and convent of Westminster to Edward Ingham and his wife Cecily of property in King Street, Westminster, dated 24 October 1528.
WAM 18048: Lists of tenements belonging to the ‘Red Lyon’, Westminster, with names of holders and rents. Undated; time of Henry VIII.
WAM 18068: General release from John Richard or Richardson of Westminster to Cornelius Van Dun, yeoman of the Guard, and John Varnam, concerning ground called St. Armytts Hill, Westminster. 9 March 1576.
WAM 19804: Roll of Sacrist’s rental for 1529-30.
WAM 19810: Roll of Sacrist’s rental for 1528.

Westminster City Archives

WCA Wills Register Bracy; WCA Wills Register Elsam.

British Library

Manuscripts from the following collections:-

Additional Arundel
Cotton: Augustus, Caligula, Cleopatra, Faustina, Galba, Julius, Otho, Tiberius, Titus, Vespasian Egerton
Harley
Lansdowne
Royal Stowe

Public Record Office

C1 Early Chancery proceedings
C66 Chancery, patent rolls
C82 Chancery warrants for the great seal
C142 Chancery, inquisitions post mortem, escheats, wards
DL Duchy of Lancaster
E36 Exchequer, Treasury of Receipt, miscellaneous books
E101 Exchequer, King's Remembrancer, various accounts
E122 Customs accounts
E136 Escheator's accounts
E150 Exchequer, King's Remembrancer, inquisitions post mortem, series II, escheators' accounts
E179 Exchequer, King's Remembrancer, subsidy rolls
E313 Exchequer, Augmentation Office
E314 Court of Augmentations and Court of General Surveyors: miscellaneous
E315 Exchequer, Augmentation Office, miscellaneous books
E404 Exchequer of Receipts, writs and warrants for issues
E405 Exchequer of Receipts and Issues, tellers' books or rolls
LC Accounts of Lord Chamberlain's Department
LS Accounts of Lord Steward's Department
PROB 11 Microfilms of wills proved in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury
REQ 1-2 Proceedings of the Court of Requests
SC 6 Special collections, ministers' and receivers' accounts
SP 1-2 State Papers Henry VIII
STAC 2 Court of Star Chamber, proceedings, Henry VIII

Primary Sources: Printed

A Collection of Ordinances and Regulations for the Government of the Royal Household Made in Divers Reigns from King Edward III to King William and Queen Mary (Society of Antiquaries, 1790)

An Inventory of the Historical Monuments in Buckinghamshire, i, Royal Commission on Historical Monuments (England) (1912)

Anstis, J., ed., The Register of the most noble Order of the Garter, 2 vols. (1724)

Bentley, S., ed., Excerpta Historica (1831)

Bradford, G., ed., Proceedings in the Court of the Star Chamber in the Reigns of Henry VII and Henry VIII, Somerset Record Society, 27 (1911)

Brewer, J. S., and Bullen, W., eds., Calendar of the Carew Manuscripts 1515-1574 (1867)

Brown, R.L., ed., Calendar of State Papers and Manuscripts existing in the archives and collections of Venice, 1520-1526 (1869)
Brown, R. L., ed. and transl., Four years at the court of King Henry VIII: Selection of Despatches written by the Venetian Ambassador, Sebastian Giustinian, 2 vols. (1854)

Calendar of the Fine Rolls preserved in the Public Record Office: Henry VII 1485-1509 (1962)

Calendar of Inquisitions Post Mortem, Henry VII, 3 vols. (1898, 1915, 1955)

Calendar of the Patent Rolls preserved in the Public Record Office:
  - Edward IV and Henry VI 1467-1477 (1900)
  - Edward IV, Edward V and Richard III 1476-1485 (1901)
  - Edward VI 1547-1548 (1924) and 1549-1551 (1925)
  - Philip and Mary 1553-1554 (1937); 1555-1557 (1938)
  - Elizabeth 1558-1560 (1939)

Chibnall, A. C., ed., The Certificates of Musters for Buckinghamshire of 1522, Buckinghamshire Record Society, 17 (1973)

Chibnall, A. C., and Vere Woodman, A., eds., Subsidy Roll for the County of Buckingham, Anno 1524, Buckinghamshire Record Society, 8 (1944)

Colby, F. T., ed., The Visitation of the County of Devon in the year 1564: with additions from the Earlier Visitation of 1531 (Exeter, 1881)

Colby, F. T., ed., The Visitation of the County of Devon in the year 1620, Harleian Society, 6 (1872)

Cornwall, J., ed., The Lay Subsidy Rolls for the County of Sussex 1524-25, Sussex Record Society, 56 (Lewes, 1956)

Fry, E. A., ed., Calendar of Wills and Administrations in the Consistory Court of the Bishop of Worcester 1451-1600, British Record Society, 31 (1904)

Gairdner, J., ed., Memorials of King Henry The Seventh, Rolls Series 10 (1858)

Hall's Chronicle, ed. H. Ellis (1809 edition)

Hardwicke, Earl of, ed., Miscellaneous State Papers from 1501 to 1726, 1 (1778)

Historical Manuscripts Commission:

The Manuscripts of his Grace the Duke of Rutland, K.G., preserved at Belvoir Castle, iv (1905)

Third Annual Report of the Deputy Keeper of the Public Records [hereafter DKR] (1842); Appendix 2 – Trial and Conviction of Edward, Duke of Buckingham

*See Public Record Office
† See p.282

- 278 -
Twenty-fifth Annual Report of the DKR (1864), Appendix 1 - Calendar of Crown Leases 33-38 Henry VIII
Twenty-sixth Annual Report of the DKR (1865), Appendix 2 - Welsh Records
Thirty-first Annual Report of the DKR (1870), Appendix 3 - Welsh Records, List of Officers
Thirty-ninth Annual Report of the DKR (1878), Appendix 1 - Welsh Records, Recognizance Rolls of Chester

Holinshed, R., ed., Chronicles of England, Scotland and Ireland, 6 vols. (1807-8)
Index of Wills and Administrations at Canterbury 1396-1558 and 1640-1650, British Record Society, 50 (1920)
Leadam, I. S., ed., Select Cases in the Court of Requests 1497-1569, Selden Society, 12 (1898)
Leland, J., De Rebus Britannicis Collectanea, ed. T. Hearne, second edition, 6 vols. (1770)
Maclean, Sir John, and Heane, W. C., eds., The Visitation of the County of Gloucester taken in the year 1623 by Henry Chitty and John Phillipott as deputies to William Camden, Clarenceux King of Arms, Harleian Society, 21 (1885)
Madden, F. W., ed., Privy Purse Expenses of the Princess Mary, December 1536 to December 1544 (1831)
Mundy, P. D., ed., Abstracts of Star Chamber Proceedings relating to the County of Sussex, Henry VII to Phillip and Mary, Sussex Record Society, 16 (1913)
Murray, A. G. W., and Bosanquet, E. F., eds., Excerpts from the manuscript of William Dunchen, The Genealogist, NS, 29 (1913) and 30 (1914)
Nicholas, N. H. (Sir Harris), ed., Privy Purse Expenses of Elizabeth of York: Wardrobe Accounts of Edward the Fourth (1830)
Nicholas, Sir Harris, ed., Privy Purse Expenses of Henry VIII from November 1529 to December 1532 (1827)
Norcliffe, C. B., ed., Visitation of Yorkshire 1563 and 1564 by William Flower, Harleian Society, 16 (1881)
Phillimore, W. P. W., ed., Lichfield Wills and Administrations 1516-1652: Also 'Peculiars' at Lichfield, Birmingham and Derby 1529-1652: 1675-1790, British Record Society, 7 (1892)
Pleadings and Depositions in the Duchy Court of Lancaster, Lancs. and Cheshire Record Society, 32 (1896) and 35 (1897)
Raines, Rev. F. R., ed., The Visitation of the County Palatine of Lancaster made in the year 1567 by William Flower, Chetham Society, 81 (1870)
Rylands, J. P., ed., The Visitation of the County of Dorset taken in the year 1623, Harleian Society, 20 (1885)
Sneyd, C. A., ed. and transl., A Relation, or rather a true Account of the Island of England about the year 1500, Camden Society, 37 (1847)
Stewart-Brown, R., ed., Lancashire and Cheshire cases in the Court of Star Chamber, i, Lancs. and Cheshire Record Society, 71 (1916)

Public Record Office - see Historical Manuscripts Commission - 279 - Stoate, T. L., ed., Cornwall Subsidies in the Reign of Henry VIII (Bristol, 1985)
Stoate, T. L., ed., Devon Lay Subsidy Rolls 1524-7 (Bristol, 1979)
Stoate, T. L., ed., Devon Lay Subsidy Rolls 1543-5 (Bristol, 1986)

Sturgess, H. A. C., ed., Register of Admissions to the Honorable Society of the Middle Temple. From the Fifteenth Century to the year 1944, i (1949)

The Four Visitations of Berkshire 1532, 1566, 1623 and 1665-66, Harleian Society, 56 (1907)
The Records of the Honorable Society of Lincoln’s Inn, 2 vols. (1896)
The Visitation of the County of Warwick in the year 1619, Harleian Society, 12 (1877)

Turner, W. H., ed., The Visitations of the County of Oxford Taken in the Years 1566, 1574 and 1634, Harleian Society, 5 (1871)

Visititation of Cheshire 1580, Harleian Society, 18 (1882)

Visitation of Yorkshire 1575 by William Flower and Robert Glover, Surtees Society, 146 (1932)

Visitation of the North: Harvey’s Visitation 1552, Surtees Society, 122 (1912)

Vivian, J. L., ed., The Visitations of the County of Devon. Heralds’ Visitations of 1531, 1564 and 1620 (1895)

Weaver, Rev. F. W., ed., Somerset Medieval Wills 1501-30, Somerset Record Society, 19 (1903)

Weaver, F. W., ed., The Visitations of Herefordshire made by Robert Cooke, Clarencieux, in 1569 (Exeter, 1886)

Weaver, F. W., ed., Visitations of Somerset 1531, 1573 (Exeter, 1885)

Wills Proved in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury 1383-1558, ii, British Record Society, 11 (1895)

Worth, R. N., ed., Calendar of the Tavistock Parish Records (Plymouth, 1887)

Unpublished Sources

Secondary Sources

Anglo, S., 'The Court Festivals of Henry VII: A study based upon the account books of John Heron, Treasurer of the Chamber', Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, 43 (1960), 12-45
Anglo, S., Spectacle, Pageantry and Early Tudor Policy (Oxford, 1969)
Arthursone, I., The Perkin Warbeck Conspiracy 1491-1499 (Gloucester, 1994)
Bacon, N., ed., An Historical and Political Discourse of the Laws and Government of England from the first times to the end of the reign of Queen Elizabeth. Collected from some manuscript Notes of John Selden, fourth edition (1739), 2nd part Baines, E., The History of the County Palatine and Duchy of Lancaster, iv (1891)
Baker, Sir Richard, Chronicle (1679)
Barron, O., ed., VCH Northampton Families, Genealogical Volume (1906)
Beard, C. R., 'The Clothing and Arming of the Yeomen of the Guard from 1485 to 1685', The Archaeological Journal, 82 (1925) and 2nd series, 32 (1928), 91-148
Belcher, W. D., Kentish Brasses, 2 vols. (1905)
Bennett, M., Lambert Simnel and the Battle of Stoke (Gloucester and New York, 1987)
Blore, T., The History and Antiquities of the County of Rutland (Stamford, 1811)
Boutell, Rev. C., Monumental brasses and Slabs (1847)
Brackenbury, H., The History of His Majesty's Body Guard of the Honourable Corps of Gentlemen-at-Arms (1905)
Brackenbury, H., The Nearest Guard (1892)
Burke, A. M., ed., Memorials of St. Margaret's Church, Westminster (1914)
Burke, Sir Bernard, The General Armory (1884)
Burke, J., A Genealogical and Heraldic History of the Commoners of Great Britain and Ireland, ii (1835)
Busch, W., England under the Tudors: i, King Henry VII, transl. A. M. Todd (1895)
Carlisle, N., Gentlemen of the Privy Chamber (1829)
Chamberlayn, E., Angliae Notitia or The Present State of England (1692 edition)
Chirmes, S. B., Henry VII (1972)
Clayton, M., Catalogue of Rubbings of Brasses and Incised Slabs (Victoria and Albert Museum, 1929)
Collinson, Rev. J., The History and Antiquities of the County of Somerset, 3 vols. (Bath, 1791)
Conway, A., Henry VII's Relations with Scotland and Ireland 1485-1498 (Cambridge, 1932)
Copinger, W. A., The Manors of Suffolk, iii (Manchester, 1909)
Cruickshank, C. G., Henry VIII and the Invasion of France (Stroud, Gloucestershire, 1990)
Dictionary of National Biography, eds. Sir Leslie Stephen and Sir Sidney Lee

Drake, H. H., ed., Hasted’s History of Kent: The Hundred of Blackheath (1886)

Drew, S., ed., The History of Cornwall, i (1824)

Duncumb, J., Collections towards the History and Antiquities of the County of Hereford, ii, pt. 1 (Hereford, 1812)

Gillman, A. W., Searches into the History of the Gillman or Gilman Family (1895)

Greenstreet, J., ed., Kent Contributors to a Loan to the King A.D. 1542, Archaeologia Cantiana, 11 (1877), 398-404

Gurney Benham, W., The Red Paper Book of Colchester (Colchester, 1902)

† Printed primary source

North Riding Record Society, NS, 1 (1894)

Oppenheim, M., ed., Naval Accounts and Inventories of the reign of Henry VII, Navy Records Society, 8 (1896)

Ormerod, G., The History of the County Palatine and City of Chester, iii, pt. 2 (1882)

Platts, B., Croome Hill. The Oldest Road in London?, Transactions of the Greenwich and Lewisham Antiquarian Society, 7, no. 3 (1968), 167-178

Pote, J., The History and Antiquities of Windsor Castle, and the Royal College, and Chapel of St. George (Eton, 1749)

Powell, J. E., and Wallis, K., The House of Lords in the Middle Ages (1968)

Read, C., Mr. Secretary Cecil and Queen Elizabeth (1955)

Reaney, P. H., and Fitch, M., eds., Feet of Fines for Essex: 1423-1547 (Colchester, 1964)

Richardson, W. C., Tudor Chamber Administration 1485-1547 (Baton Rouge, 1952)

Rowse, A. L., 'Alltyrynys and the Cecils', EHR, 75 (1960), 54-76

Sherwood, G., ed., The Pedigree Register, i (1907-10)

Simmons, J., ed., J. Wright's 1684 publication The History and Antiquities of the County of Rutland, Classical County Histories (Wakefield, Yorkshire, 1973)

Speed, J., The History of Great Britain ... third edition (1632)

Spont, A., Letters and Papers relating to the War with France 1512-1513, Navy Records Society, 10 (1897)

Stapleton, T., ed., Plumpton Correspondence, Camden Society, 4 (1839)

Stephenson, M., A List of Monumental Brasses in the British Isles (1926)

Stone, F. L., The Political Programme of Thomas Cromwell, BIHR, 24 (1951), 1-18

Stow, J., Annales or a General Chronicle of England (1632)

Strype, J., ed., Stow's Survey of the Cities of London and Westminster (1720), Book 6

Stuart, G., A View of Society in Europe (Edinburgh, 1778; London, 1783)

The Black Book of Southampton, iii, Publications of the Southampton Record Society (Southampton, 1915)

The Victoria History of the Counties of England

Weever, J., Ancient Funeral Monuments (1767)
